THE GOODRICH MURDER

Continuation of the Coroner's Investigation.

THE MURDERESS IN HER CELL.

Tidings from Her Alleged Birthplace.

The most intense human interest centres in the recent startling disclosures in the Goodrich murder case, and the announcement that Miss Lizzie Lloyd King, alias "Kate Stoddard," "Amy Stone," "Amy Snow," "Minnie Waltham" and "Jessie Willoughby," has been committed by the Coroner's jury, charged with the murder of Charles Goodrich, will not tend to allay the excitement.

The resumption of the Coroner's inquest yesterday morning in the Kings County Court House, at which it was known that the self-accused murderess would be present, was sufficient to attract from both cities a very large assemblage of people, who thronged the corridors, or were fortunate enough to get into the room, in the hope of obtaining a glimpse of the mysterious criminal. Inside the court room—for the inquest was held in Judge Moore's room—the large audience betrayed in every statement as it fell from the lips of the several witnesses. It is doubtful if in the whole experience of the oldest criminal lawyers in either of the two cities there was ever witnessed such a series of dramatic scenes as those which will make the picture of that Coroner's examination memorable to every spectator in that great court room. The whole case is fraught with so much that is mysterious and startling that the quiet, easy going public can hardly yet realize on the one hand, and the greatness of a grief which could inspire the fury of despair and murder. It is strange that just as the city is recovering from the shock of the Walworth tragedy there should come such additional and damning evidence of the double lives of the men of the world. By degrees there will come a better understanding of the great social undercurrent, which bears on its mysterious current so much that is good and evil in humanity.

THE MOST ABSORBING INTEREST

THE DOUBLE LIFE OF THE VICTIM

AN ART GALLERY OF LIFE.

The scene in the court room was a strange, wild picture, in which the loves, sorrows and hates of three women's lives were to be seen. The central figure was the prisoner, and on her the eyes of the entire audience seemed fixed. There she sat—a poor, weak, lone woman, defenceless and friendless, on whom all the majesty of the law was soon to be brought to bear to avenge the taking of a craven life. Pale, emaciated and poorly clad, there was written on every feature of her face the sad, sad story—

"TIRED OF LIFE."

Once a woman of undoubted refinement, and in the enjoyment, doubtless, of a reasonable share of happiness, she now stood dishonored and disgraced and charged with the greatest crime known to the law. Her cold, hazel-blue eye, tightly compressed lips—apparently resolute in their firmness, yet indicative of a wavering spirit at times—and her pale forehead, around which fell a luxuriance of blond hair, all spoke volumes in her behalf as she sat, silent and alone, confronting a world that had misused and wronged her.

THE LOVED AND LOST.

The second figure in that picture was even more sad. Adelaide Palm, the betrothed wife of the murdered man, was brought into the witness box. She was modest and evidently unused to such scenes. The trial for her, as she identified each of the articles of her former lover, was almost beyond the endurance of womankind. With a wonderful calmness she began, then faltered, and ever and anon, almost choking with emotion, her answers became unintelligible. It was a terrible struggle between outraged love and pity, grief for the once loved having the mastery.

"WITNESS, LOOK UPON THE PRISONER!"

The supreme moment came, however, with the question, "Miss Palm, have you seen any one present in company with Mr. Goodrich in a room on East Seventeenth street?" The witness looked upon the prisoner, and after a long pause replied, "Yes, this person." The affianced wife of the murdered man, who had likewise been deceived by him, fixed upon the self-accused murderess a steady look, not of contempt, nor of pity, but a meaningless stare, which conveyed little impression to others' minds of the thoughts which are revelling in the heart. There was in the court room as the prisoner, apparently summoning little extra courage to her assistance, met the gaze of the woman whose place she had at one time believed she held in the sight of God and of all mankind. The passing thoughts of those two human hearts may never be known. It is probable that neither could tell all the sentiments which possessed them in those moments. As Miss Palm recognized one article of jewelry after another Kate Stoddard watched every movement of the witness' hands and listened with an intentness really painful.

THE CURSES OF MEN LIVE AFTER THEM.

All the world seemed to be wrapped up in the answers of the unfortunate woman who was thus being made a public show because she confided in a man who was unworthy of any true woman's love. Visions of that mock marriage on the one hand, and on the other of the real one which was so soon to have taken place; visions of that night's debauch in Degraw street, when the poor seamstress fought for her life, and again of the victim's visits to his intended bride; a cold, sad picture of that dreary scene in the shade of a February evening, with the thinly clad figure in the prisoners' dock, seated on her trunk, inditing that remarkable narrative of outraged womanhood; and, last of all, that long, long night's watch by the side of the corpse—all these strange contrasts came up in the mind during that one moment of breathless silence.

THE SENSATIONS OF A MOMENT.

It was an interval of time to be remembered for years. The weaker vessel appeared to be the stronger. God, who alone judges the workings of the heart and the impulses of an outraged soul, must have nerved the poor, wretched prisoner to endure that strain, for she bore it Juno-like. The true woman, however, without deception and unknown to crime, faltered as she resumed her testimony, and, dropping her veil, her eyes were suffused with tears. There may have been pity, there may have been scorn in the slight quiver of the lip which was noticeable on the face of Kate Stoddard, but the most acute observer could not read the workings of her heart.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

KATE STODDARD PUTS IN AN APPEARANCE.

Shortly after eleven o'clock a medium-sized, extremely pale, light bluish-gray-eyed, fair-haired young woman, with tresses combed down her back, entered the Coroner's office in company with Captain McConnell, and, looking rather vacantly about her, followed her custodian into the witness' waiting room adjoining. She was tastefully attired in a slate-colored or Quaker-hued silk dress, with white linen, neat-fitting waist. She wore a mixed straw turban hat, trimmed with brown ribbon and an ostrich feather. About her neck was a blue ribbon and coral necklace and a gold locket. From her belt hung a parasol. The pressure for admission to the chamber in which the prisoner was detained was very great, so deeply was the morbid curiosity of the officials excited. There might be seen General Jourdan and his brother Police Commissioner, Briggs: both of these officials held an extended interview with the woman. There also were Supervisor Richards, ex-Coroner Norris, ex-Judge Troy, several Aldermen and many other prominent habitués of the public offices of Brooklyn.

LUCETTE MEYERS,

who has been so very prominently identified with this remarkable case, entered the Coroner's office shortly after Miss Stoddard, in company with Detective Folk. She wore a striped linen dress, high at the neck, and was closely veiled. The delay occasioned was caused by the non-appearance of several of the jurors, for whom emissaries were sent out in every direction. Meanwhile the crowd increased in proportion, both in the Coroner's office and the Court of Sessions. Police officers were placed on guard at each entrance to the apartment who admitted none others than members of the bar, representatives of the press (whose name was legion) and witnesses and others who could command sufficient influence with the officers. The Court of Sessions adjourned at noon, and accommodations for the press were at once accorded by the Court officer, Joseph Winters. The Coroner informed the prisoner while in his office that it was not obligatory on her part to make any statement that might criminate her, and that she could have counsel furnished her without expense in case she desired such. She thanked him and said she would avail herself of the offer of counsel.

The prisoner was removed from the Coroner's office across the corridor to the court room at five minutes past one o'clock. As she passed across the hall a strong force of policemen, with batons drawn, had their hands full to keep back the surging throng that bore down upon them like a pack of wild beasts hungry in the scent of blood in their eagerness to get a view of the pale, slender, girlish-looking woman who walked steadily after her custodians and took a seat in the corner of the apartment. "Get back!" "Get back!" "I tell you you can't go in there!" vociferated the officers, and peace was finally secured, but not before all available space had been occupied. Mary Handley, the female "friend" who betrayed her former roommate, "Kate Stoddard," and wins the reward, is a tall, plain-looking woman, about thirty years of age, and was attired in a half-mourning suit. She entered the court in company with Chief of Police Campbell, who originated the scheme of employing her and setting her upon the trail of the woman now on trial for her life.

THE PROCEEDINGS COMMENCED.

Coroner Whitehill called the roll of jurors (Alderman William Richardson, chairman) at twenty-five minutes past one, when eleven answered, the twelfth juror, Mr. Robbins, being in Europe.

The first witness called was Lucette Meyers. "Gangway here, if you please," cried the officer who conducted her to the chair, and Lucette made her appearance once more upon the witness stand. The watch, chain, seal and ring were shown the witness, and she took each article in her hand and identified them. The pocket-book and diary she failed to recognize as having seen with Goodrich. The pistol shown her (a black handled weapon) she said was not owned by Goodrich, but she had seen it with Roscoe in the month of March, a week previous to the murder; saw it in Roscoe's possession in Rivington street; declined to state the conversation which occurred upon the occasion, not because it would criminate her, however; her reason was that to state conversation would interfere with the ends of justice. Mrs. Meyers, at the request of the Coroner, identified the prisoner as Kate Stoddard or Amy Stone. The latter faced her steadily, and the witness' eyelids drooped as she did so. Saw her three or four times, but declined to state when last she saw her, as it would interfere with the ends of justice. The Coroner urged the witness to go on and give the jury any information that she desired upon the case.

By a Juror—Saw the prisoner at her house three or four times in Rivington street, where she called to look for board; had seen this woman and Roscoe conversing together on three or four different occasions. Witness said she had certain reasons for saying on the previous examination that she did not know Kate Stoddard.

Miss Adelaide Cahn was the next witness. She resides at 226 East Fifty-ninth street. On taking the stand she was much overcome by her feelings. As soon as she became composed she identified the watch, but not the chain shown, as belonging to deceased. The pocketbook she also recognized by certain marks, which she stated to the jury. The two revolvers in possession of the Coroners were produced, when she said she had seen one of them in the possession of Goodrich. She took a long, steady look at "Kate," and said she had seen her before at 217 East Seventeenth street, where deceased had had a room; the prisoner was in his company at the time; this was in June or July of last year. Miss Cahn was, it is said, at one time the affianced of Charles Goodrich.

Miss Mary Handley, was the next person examined. She resides at 298 Clinton street, and identified the prisoner; had known her since the 8th of February a year ago, when they were room mates at 48 Elizabeth street, New York, for four months, or more; during that time she never spoke of Goodrich to her; saw Goodrich on one occasion, when he called at the house in Elizabeth street to see "Kate;" she worked at making straw hats at Thompsons', 577 Broadway, at that period; on the 4th, in 1872, the prisoner was stopping at the Working Women's Home, New York; next heard of her this present week; had not seen her since; on Tuesday morning last the witness met the prisoner, for whom she had been looking for several weeks previous, by chance, on Fulton street, near the ferry, and calling an officer had her arrested. The particulars of the arrest have been previously published.

By a Juror—There was another girl rooming with Kate and myself at the Elizabeth street house; some difficulty had occurred between us during our residence there, but do not recollect what was the nature of the quarrel.

Mrs. Hannah Knight, 227 High street, on taking the stand, bowed kindly to the frail-looking prisoner, who sat just outside the enclosure and eagerly watched the proceedings. Mrs. Knight testified that she recognized the prisoner as the person who came to her house in High street; saw her almost every day; don't remember what reason she gave when she said she wanted a furnished room; she gave the name of Miss Minnie Walling or Walding; she seemed to be employed on Broadway, New York; when she first came to board there, in the second part of April, she went to New York daily; subsequently she brought her work home; she gave no explanation in relation to her being married; $2 50 per week was the price paid for the apartment; never received any letters there; she might have sent a number without the knowledge of witness; the prisoner never spoke about Charles Goodrich; she never went out in company of any of the inmates of the house; always went out alone; she never wore a marriage ring in presence of witness; the prisoner had a piano with her in the house.

Mr. David Goodrich, father of the murdered man, a venerable old gentleman, identified all the articles shown him excepting the pistols; the weapon his son Charles had had a white handle; his memory was quite clear on that point; the dark handled revolver shown might have been owned by his son, but he never saw it with him; the first intimation of the murder was conveyed to him by Mr. Ray Potter on the day it was discovered; a letter written by "Amy G." (the prisoner), identical with the one sent to his son, W. W. Goodrich, was received by the witness in his store in February last; it was handed him by a lady who wore a veil; had not seen the woman who gave it him since; the next day he conferred with William upon the strange circumstance, and was told that the woman was then staying in the Degraw street house with Charles; he advised his son (deceased) to get out of the matter the best way he could.

Captain John McConnell, of the Second precinct police, testified that he visited 127 High street; before going there had seen the prisoner in custody at the station house; the property found in her trunks included two pistols (one of which, having three chambers discharged and four loaded, was identified by the Captain); the prisoner was brought to the station house at five minutes of twelve on Tuesday forenoon.

The Chairman of the jury, A. D. Richardson, asked what statement, if any, did she make at the time of her arrest.

The Coroner objected to the question, as a reply might tend to criminate the prisoner. The circumstances were such as to naturally excite her, and statements made under such conditions might prove damaging to her case. A private conference was then held between the Coroner and the jury. When the testimony was resumed the witness continued that Kate Stoddard told him many stories in relation to the death of Charles Goodrich; I questioned her a good deal on the subject, but she volunteered nothing; I told her that if I was put on the stand I would state what she told me.

Corporation Counsel W. C. DeWitt counsel for the prisoner, objected to the witness giving any statement made by her prior to his cautioning her that he would have to testify to what she might tell him concerning the case.

Witness continued that when he would repeat the questions she would exclaim, "Oh, my gracious! don't ask me that again; I have told you of that before."

The jury did not insist upon any further answers from the witness.

THE BOGUS WATCHMAN,

Charles Green, alias George Baker, brother-in-law of deceased, was then called to the stand and recognized Miss Stoddard as the lady he had spoken of in his former testimony. Witness then recounted the main points of his evidence given before a previous session of the investigation in May last; saw her at the house in Degraw street on Saturday night and followed her to New York on the Sunday following.

Commissioner Jourdan, President of the Board of Police, took the stand and testified that the Chief of Police had told him that the prisoner had made statements to him in reference to the death of Mr. Goodrich; with regard to the murder, I cautioned her this morning to make no statements without the advice of her counsel.

An informal recess, that is to say, one which was not announced, was had at this point of the proceedings, during which Alderman Richardson, Chief Campbell and the Coroner conferred together upon the propriety of admitting certain testimony.

Chief of Police Campbell took the witness stand, and, being sworn, testified that he told her that anything she said to him would not be told in evidence; his object was to find her place of residence, in order to get at her effects; I have made no statement to any reporter for the press concerning any statement made by the prisoner in relation to the death of Charles Goodrich; I decline to answer any question relating to what she told me upon the subject; she told me something as to how he came by his death; had a running conversation with her upon the subject; she did not tell me where she had been living; I asked her name and she refused to give it; after a few minutes I addressed her as "Kate," and she said "Don't call me that; she said call me 'Amy G.;'"

SHE WORE A GOLD LOCKET,

the one which she has on now.

"The locket cannot be shown the jury," remarked the Coroner.

The counsel said she did not wish to withhold anything from the jury; but at present she does not wish to present the prosecution with any idea of her line of defence, which would be full and ample on her trial.

The chairman of the jury said that he did not wish to prejudice the case of the prisoner, and for that reason would not ask any further questions.

The witness proceeded to testify as to his reason for employing Mary Handley as a special detective, and the ruse of sending policemen to inquire at every house in the city whether any lady was missing since Tuesday last, which led to the discovery of Kate's lodging place.

MISS KING, ALIAS KATE STODDARD, was then, at the request of the jury, placed upon the witness stand, and, being sworn, the Coroner cautioned her that she had the right to refuse to answer any question that she believed might tend to injure her. She said, "My name is Lizzie Lloyd King."

The counsel here objected to her answering any question whatsoever.

Alderman Richardson said that he simply wanted to ask her under oath whether she declined to answer any questions in the case.

The counsel said it was but fair to state that she had declined upon his advice alone, and that she would make a full and clear statement of her connection with the case upon the trial.

Miss King then withdrew to her seat.

Dr. Reuben Smith was called, and it was stated that he was sick; whereupon the chairman of the jury said that there was no doubt as to the point that the woman present was the person whom the Doctor had seen in the Degraw street house in company with deceased. They did not, therefore, desire his testimony. Some of the jury subsequently expressed a desire that Dr. Smith should be heard again, and they withdrew to the antechamber at four o'clock to deliberate upon the propriety of adjourning until the Doctor could be heard before them.

During the absence of the jury Miss King conversed with Counsellor De Witt and toyed with the gold locket, which she jealously guards from scrutiny, refusing to display its contents, which are said to be a blood stained lock of hair, that of Charles Goodrich. Her gaze rarely wandered from one object to another, but remained fixed for many minutes upon vacancy; indeed, she bore at intervals a decidedly crazed appearance.

The jury returned at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock and stated that they had concluded to get along without any further evidence from Dr. Smith. If the Coroner had any more evidence of a definite character to submit they would be willing to hear it and leave it to the judgment of the Coroner to close the inquest at this point.

The Coroner said, in his judgment, they had sufficient evidence, and after instructing them as to their duty the jury withdrew to their deliberations at fifteen minutes before five o'clock. The Coroner remained manfully at his self-imposed post of duty "waiting for the verdict," and the hum of busy idle speculation resounded through the spacious apartment. The deed was done Thursday, March 20, 1873. This fact is admitted by the prisoner and upsets the theory of the physicians that the deceased met his death a few hours prior to the finding of his body at nine o'clock on Friday morning, March 21. The jury returned at six o'clock with the following VERDICT.

"We find that the said Charles Goodrich came to his death by pistol shot wounds in the head, inflicted by Lizzie Lloyd King, alias Kate Stoddard, with intent to cause death, on the evening of the 20th of March, 1873, at his aforesaid house in Degraw street, Brooklyn. In witness whereof we, the said jurors, as well as the Coroner, have to this inquisition set our hands and seal, on the day and place aforesaid."

WILLIAM RICHARDSON, MICHAEL BENNETT, OWEN HAZLETINE, ROBERT SPEIR, HENRY E. FOWLER, WILLIAM ROBINS ON, FRANK P. GAVAN' D. D. WHITNEY,	Jurors.

The subjoined general remarks were appended to the verdict:—

First—It is our conviction that the Coroner's jury, as an institution for the discovery of crime or detection of criminals, has outlived the period of necessity or usefulness. In cases of death as the result of violence of any kind, whether accidental or designed, or occurring under such circumstances of doubt either as to its cause or commission as to call for an investigation, we believe that it could be more efficiently conducted by some legally designated criminal or health authorities, or both combined, than under the present system, which we believe is more liable to than to result in discovery and conviction.

Second—While the present system does exist we consider it of the first importance that the jury should be assembled promptly and caused to view the body of the deceased as nearly as possible in the condition, position, and under the circumstances in which the body was discovered; and we believe far greater aid can be in this way afforded to a jury in doubtful cases in arriving at correct conclusions as to the cause of death, and whether self-inflicted or otherwise, than by any other evidence. In our judgment a post-mortem examination, when considered necessary, should follow and not precede an inspection by the jury.

The prisoner then made the following replies to the questions asked:—

Q. What is your name?
A. Lizzie Lloyd King.
Q. How old are you?
A. Twenty-six.
Q. Where were you born?
A. United States.
Q. Where do you live?
A. High street.
Q. What is your occupation?
A. Straw sewing.
Q. Have you anything to say—and if so, what—relative to the charge here preferred against you?
A. Nothing at present.

She was then given over to the custody of the Deputy Sheriff and taken to the Raymond Street Jail, where she was provided with a cell on the second floor. Her bearing was quiet and undemonstrative. The Coroner hoped that no personal reflection was intended by the addenda to the verdict. The jury declared that it was far from their intention to cast any reflection upon him. It was the system alone they decried.

HOW THE MURDERESS WAS FOUND.

The Story of Miss Mary Handley, Detective.

While the lady herself does not fail to give the entire credit of the capture of Kate Stoddard to Chief of Police Campbell, there is no disputing the fact that Miss Mary Handley was the heroine of the inquest yesterday. There was romance in the fact that a woman had succeeded where so many self-conceited detectives have failed. Then, too, the fact that the self-confessed murderess had been discovered upon one of the busiest thoroughfares in the very city where the killing was done, and by one who had been a former acquaintance, was enough to interest all those who have any liking for the sensational or the curious. The policy of Chief Campbell has been thoroughly displayed in the success of Miss Handley, for there can be no question but that ultimate success was achieved by a perseverance which was indefatigable and unswerving—it matters not how much of the actual capture is due to the lucky goddess of Fortune. Chief Campbell evidently remembered the old maxim, which has now become a truism, "To compas Satan, employ a woman," and as the result has shown the Chief augured rightly.

THE AMATEUR DETECTIVE.

The pride which Chief Campbell feels in the success of his scheme is allowable on many accounts, and as Miss Handley retired from the witness stand and returned to the Coroner's private office she seemed in every way worthy of the confidence which the head of the police force had reposed in her. She appeared thoroughly self-possessed and ladylike; neither flushed with success nor ashamed of what had appeared clearly her duty. Through the courtesy of the Chief a HERALD representative was introduced to Miss Handley and obtained from her many additional particulars regarding her work as a detective in the Goodrich murder case. Miss Handley is a lady of medium height, rather stout in build, and, at a guess, from twenty-six to twenty-eight years of age. A clear complexion and a mass of rich brown hair beautify and embellish a face which is full and regular-featured. She was arrayed in a black silk dress, light gray mohair redingote, and a bonnet of the latest style trimmed in blue.

TRACKING A MURDERESS.

"Will you please state the circumstances through which you became acquainted with Miss Kate Stoddard?" asked the HERALD reporter.

"I first became acquainted with Kate Stoddard in February, 1872, at a boarding house, No. 48 Elizabeth street, New York. We occupied the same room there. Kate worked in a straw goods house in Sixth avenue and I worked at Thompson's millinery store on Broadway; Kate worked in Sixth avenue till June, 1872, when she got an engagement in a Broadway store. She was frequently in the habit of leaving the boarding house and remaining away for two or three hours at a time. The boarding house closed on the 1st of July, 1872, but Kate and I remained there till the 4th; she and I went out together on that day, and this was the first occasion I had ever gone out with her.

"At what time did you separate?"

"I never saw her from that day until about the last of September or the 1st of October. At that time I was living at 220 Madison street. Kate Stoddard came to my room early on the morning of that day. She was looking very much excited. With her she brought a large satchel and a parcel filled with clothes. I was going out, but I told her to remain in the room and to make herself perfectly comfortable. She laid down on the sofa and I went out. On my return I found her gone and her parcels."

"What was your business prior to engaging in this work?" asked the reporter.

"I was a milliner, and was so employed when I met Kate."

"This strange visit of which you speak would appear to have been about the same time as that at which the quarrel is said to have taken place between a mysterious woman and Charles Goodrich in the Degraw street house?"

"It must have been near the time at which she visited me," replied Miss Handley.

"Have you ever seen Kate Stoddard since that day when she left your house so strangely?" asked the HERALD reporter.

"Never until I met her on Fulton street on last Tuesday morning and caused her to be arrested."

A CHANCE ACQUAINTANCE.

"Was Kate Stoddard acquainted with Goodrich when you knew her?"

"Not when I first knew her, but before leaving the house I think she was keeping company with him. Indeed, from the description given of Mr. Goodrich by the people who knew him I believe I met Kate in his company one day on Broadway."

"Did Goodrich ever come to the house to see her while you were together?" asked the reporter.

"No, I do not think he ever did. I told her one day that I had seen her out with her beau, but she denied it totally."

"Did you ever see her after she left the house?" asked the reporter.

"No, she forsook all the old places of resort, keeping herself, I presume, on the Brooklyn side of the river."

"What kind of a companion was she?"

"Pleasant, impulsive and eccentric. She was very peculiar in many ways," replied Miss Handley. "She was wholly a creature of moods so far as temperament went. Sometimes she was in the wildest hilarity and at others indifferent and dull."

MISS HANDLEY'S ENGAGEMENT.

"When were you engaged on this case, Miss Handley? Will you please state all the circumstances of your chase after Miss Stoddard?" asked the reporter.

"For about six weeks after the murder I was laid up sick, and for two weeks after my recovery Chief of Police Campbell was too ill to give any time or attention to the case. I therefore did nothing until the early part of May. I knew that Kate was a worker in straw goods, and I made it my business for more than a fortnight to visit every shop of this kind in the city, ostensibly in search of employment. This was tiresome, tedious work, and, as you know, resulted in nothing. I did not find her."

AT HOME, SOLITARY AND ALONE.

"Where was she during that time?"

"She was not in any shop, but, as I know now from Mrs. Taylor, she got her work and took it home. I never relaxed my search for a day, and was encouraged in every possible way by the Chief, to whom I reported my progress from time to time. I then began to hunt among the post offices. I knew that Kate did a great deal of general correspondence, and I hoped to get some traces of her through that means. Chief Campbell, by some means, learned that she was corresponding through a private post office located at 54 East Twelfth street, New York. I watched that house faithfully. I described Kate to the postmaster, and he said such a person, answering to the name of 'Amy Marlow,' had received letters there. After 'shadowing' the place for two weeks I learned that she had written to the postmaster ordering her letters to be sent to Philadelphia.

ON TO PHILADELPHIA.

"I left for the Quaker City at once, and watched the Post Office until last Sunday night. I then received a telegram to return. I came and was ordered on Tuesday morning to return to my post at the Twelfth street post office. Chief Campbell said that he believed Kate Stoddard had resumed her correspondence through that post office, and that it must be watched. He was right, for although I did not find her there she was on her way to that very point when arrested, as you will see soon. Before leaving the Chief he gave me $5 for expenses. That money I kept in my hand, and rolling it between my two palms was walking down Fulton street. After going two or three blocks I discovered that I had lost the money. After looking about me I retraced my steps about two blocks, and strangely enough found the $5 bill lying on the sidewalk, beneath passing feet. Now, this I call strange. On getting the bill, instead of walking as I had intended, I got into a car. At the corner of High street I saw a woman come along with a cream colored veil and some other light colored material about her that attracted my attention. Looking a little closer, judge of my astonishment in the discovery that the person was no other than Kate Stoddard. I jumped from the car and followed the woman until I came to an officer. I pointed out

THE PERSON IN THE WHITE SACK,

and told him to arrest her. After some parleying he consented to do so on condition that I went to the York street station house. I told him she was Kate Stoddard, but this did not seem to convey any idea to his mind. At the station house she was locked up. I did not speak to the unfortunate woman. I did hate to give her up, but I regarded it as the discharge of my duty."

"How do you know that when arrested she was bound for the Twelfth street post office?" asked the reporter.

THE MYSTERIOUS LETTERS.

"When arrested she had in her possession the following letters, both dated, as you notice, on the morning of her capture:—

> Box 4,410,
> Jersey City,
> New Jersey.

JULY 8.

Box 4,410:—It is not convenient for me to enclose my photograph, and since you advertised with a view to matrimony, I should not think you would wish your intended wife to send her picture to a gentleman whom she has never seen. I remain, respectfully, votre fiancée,
JESSE WILLOUGHBY, Jersey City, N. J.

Address me thus.

> Mr. F. T. EVANS,
> 54 East Twelfth street
> New York.

JULY 8, 1873.

MR. F. T. EVANS:—

I regret that I have only just now received your letter of the 2d.

I hope you will have returned from Saratoga by the time this reaches you.

In my letter to you I expressed the wish that whatever letters I had sent you should be preserved, and I feel just a little bit grieved because you did not assure me that they would be. I remain, respectfully,
JESSE WILLOUGHBY.

P. S.—I consider "age," when it brings with it profitable experience, rather an advantage than otherwise to its possessor.
JESSE.

"From what I know of her habits of correspondence I am sure that she was going to the Post Office to deposit them. She tried very hard to destroy them, but failed."

THE MURDERESS IN PRISON.

When Kate Stoddard, or, to call her by her new name, Lizzie King, had walked out of the Court she sat down in the waiting room and said she felt very thirsty. A glass of water was given her, which she drank with avidity, but she said never a word about the verdict. She did not seem to know it had occurred, or what all this hubbub was about. It was the indifference of listlessness, not of callousness. Then the Deputy Sheriff said that it was time to go, and she would be made comfortable. She arose in the same mechanical passive way without a show of resistance or objection, and followed the Deputy. At the door a crowd was waiting for her, and on every side you could hear, "There she is, there she goes," but she seemed not to hear what was said. At the street a carriage was in waiting for the two. The Deputy Sheriff showed Kate in quite courteously, and followed himself. The carriage started down to Myrtle avenue and to the jail. The Sheriff had already notified the keeper that he was to expect Kate and to have a good cell ready for her.

Arrived at the prison, Kate got out of the carriage, and looking up at the building, smilingly entered the gate, which closed with a crash behind her. The keeper came forward, and said some words about making her comfortable, to which she appeared not to pay the slightest attention. The keeper, then preceding his prisoner, and probably wondering what stuff she was made of, walked ahead and opened various doors, Kate waiting patiently at each for it to be opened. Arrived on the second tier, the keeper introduced her to Mrs. Fanny Hyde, the killer of Watson, and drew the latter aside. It appears that he told her to keep a good watch on Kate, as suicide was feared if any opportunity were given. Fanny Hyde, probably commiserating a sister equally unfortunate as herself, expressed her willingness to take the charge. They are not to be in the same cell, however. A good meal was then brought to Kate Stoddard and she ate sparingly, after which she went to bed. Her cell is comfortable—as comfortable, indeed, as the jail furnishes. Already a subscription has been started for her benefit to make her life endurable while in prison.

KATE STODDARD'S BIRTHPLACE.

No Traces of Her Parents, Nor Her Residence in the Town.

MIDDLEBORO, Mass., July 12, 1873.

The story of the arrest of Kate Stoddard for the murder of Mr. Goodrich, together with the announcement that she hailed from Middleboro, has caused no little interest throughout this whole vicinity. The probabilities at this time, however, are that the confessed murderess was never in this neighborhood, and that she has no relatives, friends or acquaintances here. A HERALD correspondent has spent the whole day in scouring the town for traces of her antecedents. Many citizens have also been industriously engaged in search of information to confirm the story of her former residence here. All efforts to obtain even the slightest trace of her former presence, however, have been in vain. No such person as "Kate Stoddard," "Lizzie King," "Minnie Waltham" or "Amy Snow" was ever known here, and there have never any letters passed through the Post Office to any such address, and the Postmaster does not recall the forwarding of any letters from here for the last few months except by citizens with whom he is well acquainted. The town is a small one, and the presence of a stranger calling at the Post Office would at least attract attention. The general impression here is that the story of the young woman hailing from Middleboro is without foundation. The rumor, however, has caused a breeze of public excitement and curiosity, and various speculations are indulged in.

MARKET NUISANCES.

Occupants of Booths Ordered to Remove Them—A Protest and a Stay of Proceedings—The Odor of Decay Still Pervading Washington Market.

The Board of Health have begun the work for cleansing the more glaring evils of Washington Market. Their officers have served upon the persons whose booths cover the street gutters outside the market building, stopping the current and producing fetid and poisonous gases, notices requiring them to remove their buildings, or, in default thereof, the authorities threaten to pull them down on Monday. This action naturally caused great excitement among the multitude who during many years have drawn a livelihood for themselves and their families from the business conducted in the obnoxious shanties, which not alone create nuisances detrimental to the public health, but so infringe upon the proper uses of the streets as to be a most serious impediment to traffic.

DON'T WANT TO MOVE.

Having received the unwelcome notifications, the super-gutter merchants joined in an earnest protest to the Board of Health, pleading the long immunity which they had enjoyed, the fact that they pay roundly for the privilege of obstructing the gutters and thoroughfares as they do, and asserting that their structures and business do not, as alleged, create dangerous nuisances or threaten the public health. They also state their design to contest legally the legal power of the Board to tear away the booths. In consequence of this resistance it is understood that one week's grace has been allowed to the obstructionists, so that yesterday and last night the trade, jostling and confusion of the market proceeded in its usual manner. Nor were its offensive smells absent. Constructed as some of the booths are this cannot well be avoided. Those in Vesey and Fulton streets have in the gutters a very considerable fall towards the river. Most of them stand from twelve to eighteen inches above the gutter bottom, and having trap doors in their floors as well as being open beneath the floors on the outer side, admit of washing and sweeping the drains. Neat and careful occupants do this. Others neglect it.

STRONG SMELLS IN WEST STREET.

In West street the booths mostly have their floors very little raised from the pavement over the gutter, which has so little fall towards Fulton street that there would be but little current in it even if it were open and constantly cleaned. So, though the heavy shower of Friday had forced water through under the long, close bridge, still, yesterday, the pestilential odor, beside which bilge-water would be perfumery, saluted all nostrils of those who, with basket or satchel in hand, sought toothsome dainties for the Sunday dinner. It mingled with the flavors of fruits, the tempting freshness of meats and the alluring dairy smells of cheese and butter. It gave an unnecessary bouquet to fish and fowl, and, perchance, affected the wholesome qualities of new potatoes and cucumbers. It saluted madame as she selected her young beets and green peas for the week's supply of her boarding house, and evidently it reached the sensitive nostril of the American apostle of socialism as he sampled succulent string beans, for they did not come up to his requirements either in quality or price, though they were evidently both tender and cheap, and he left the unsavory precincts with a satchel as empty as the treasury of a Fourierite association. How could man or woman of culture, taste and refined sensibilities buy food in the presence of such a rank stench? A few of the west side booths had their floors removed last night and the filth cleaned away, but the majority were unmolested.

IN THE WHOLESALE MARKET.

Two-inch hemlock planks are accepted panacea for West Washington Market. Here yesterday an attempt was made to batten down the foul smells arising from stagnant water upon the accumulated filth which forms the soil of its streets. Gangs of men were at work laying down an extra thickness of planks over some of the worn spots, permitting still the settling of water after every shower. Any man of sense can easily tell how much this will do towards abating the nuisance which it will cover from the eye but cannot prevent from contaminating the air. And most of the most offensive holes remained untouched, not even being decently screened from sight.

THE ISSUE TO BE DECIDED.

During this week it is to be hoped, for the sake of public safety, that the Health Board will decide upon squarely taking the responsibility of clearing away all obstructions to the gutters and cleansing thoroughly all dangerous and offensive localities in and around Washington Market. If the sidewalk booths cannot be so regulated as to allow of perfect cleanliness and entire absence of offensive smells from festering accumulations of decaying organic matters, they should be sternly swept away as unworthy of a great and enlightened city. If they are rendered innoxious on the score of health then they have still to meet the charge of obstructing the public thoroughfare.

DEADLY AFFRAY IN JERSEY CITY.

A Man Assaulted by Four Negroes, Who Dance on and Dangerously Injure Him—A Saturday Night Brawl in a Liquor Store.

At a late hour last evening an affray took place in the lager beer saloon of a colored man named Growen, at 283 Newark avenue, between a man named Martin Curley and four negroes, which came nigh resulting in the death of Curley—in fact, his injuries may yet prove fatal. It appears that Curley, a stout plasterer, aged fifty-three years, entered the saloon and demanded a drink, tendering in payment therefor a fifty cent note, said to be counterfeit. A dispute arose as to the value of the stamp, and, after a few words between the disputants, four stalwart negroes fell upon Curley, threw him to the ground and kicked him violently, then jumped and danced on his abdomen. For a time the man lay motionless, and the report speedily went forth that he was dead. After a time he evinced signs of life, and Dr. Hadden was instantly sent for. Curley being in the meantime removed to the residence of his family in Newark avenue, at the foot of the hill. Dr. Hadden having kindly attended to the wounded individual, made the following statement:—

Curley was senseless for a considerable time after being kicked, and did not come to until after the application of the remedies. The bruises were inflicted on the pit of the stomach or upper part of the abdomen, so that the most serious results may ensue. If inflammation sets in certain death would ensue. Otherwise the case would not be of much consequence. After being taken to his residence and cared for by the inmates Curley was able to state the particulars of the occurrence. Captain McLevy and Officers Stucky, McDonna and Sadler arrested the following persons on suspicion of committing the deed:—Young, Hallet and Martinas. A man named Hallet was identified by a witness named Wintershein as one of the gang who kicked Curley. It is alleged that the bartender, by interfering with the parties, was the cause of the assault.

In the Jefferson Market Police Court, before Justice Ledwith, yesterday, Kate Toner, a girl of sixteen, employed as a domestic by Sarah A. Bray, of 36 West Forty-first street, was committed on a charge of stealing from the house of her employer a gold watch, valued at $160. The girl admitted the theft.

AWFUL OFFAL.

The Manure Mass on the East Side.

A NEW OBSTACLE TO ITS REMOVAL.

Long Island City Refuses Transit for Our Refuse—Garbage as New Ground—The Filling In at Harlem—An Immovable Rendering Company—Low Water Perpetuating a Nuisance.

The season of odorous compounds has not yet run its tether. The manure mass, the garbage fillings and the rendering company still triumphantly flaunt their banners to the breeze. The decrees of the Health Board have not succeeded in abating a jot of their prominence, nor in eliminating one essential bouquet from their various nosegays. It seems to signify nothing whatever that the cholera is coming, nor that people complain, nor that the Health Board threaten, the manure dumpers continue to dump, the garbage fillers to fill and the rendering company to render, with a complacency born only of clear consciences and sure expectations.

THE MANURE HEAP.

At the dumping ground on East River and Forty-sixth street three policemen continue to watch and wait for dumpers, guarding that overwhelming mass of manure with the care they might bestow on the vaults of a safe deposit company. The request of the Board of Health that twenty men might be detailed to guard the heap has been disregarded by the Police Commissioners, who evidently have less regard for the safety of a manure heap than the exigency of the circumstances requires. It was suggested by the policemen that the heap would not run away, and that if any additional piles were added to it it would be only a transfer of the pile from one offensive place to another; and that, while murders were being enacted every day and Orange parades called for extra details, the manure heap might trust in its own integrity. So the twenty men have failed to report, and the way to dumpers is as free as ever. There have not been any very desperate attempts at dumping recently, however, the stablemen having the use just now of a couple of boats. The work of continues with as much efficiency as the inspectors of the Board of Health can bring to bear upon it. Farmers do not want the manure, and the contractors consequently revolt at the idea of thrusting it a mere "drug" upon the market. The inspectors keep them tenaciously to their contract, however, and a boatload is now and then disposed of. Generally it goes to the farmers on Long Island, by way of Commissioner Charlick's railway. Yesterday, however, a new and appeared in the way of its quiet deportation. The Commonalty of Long Island City, where the boats transfer their cargoes to the trains, refused to allow the odorous mass passage through their village, and compelled the "skippers" of the vessels to return to the heap on the New York side with their loads. It is said the policemen were frightened at the profanity that ensued on the part of the contractor. The manure mass was the only object in the neighborhood that was not impressed with his vituperative vigor. A suggestion that Commissioner Charlick—who owns the railroad, and inferentially owns Long Island—would make it all right calmed the contractor and relieved somewhat the fears of the inspector. It remains to be seen, however, whether Commissioner Charlick will interfere, and, if he should do so, over how many villages of Long Island his jurisdiction as a Police Commissioner of New York city extends. If Long Island City persists in refusing the manurous cargo a refuge, notwithstanding the expected blandishments of Commissioner Charlick, the contractors will look out for some suburb where the authorities are less watchful, and dump their boatloads there before they can call a meeting and "enjoin them." It is a desperate business apparently, and New York may be again in the clutches of her suburbs, as she has been many times before.

THE HARLEM SWAMPS.

At the swamp lands in Harlem work goes on as smoothly as if an ineffable blessing were being showered upon every Harlemite within smell. The refuse foundations upon which these new streets of Harlem are to rest are composed of garbage, potato peelings, cabbage knots, pea shells, ashes and other slops, and their efficiency as street foundations, if gauged by their strength of smell, ought to prove very satisfactory indeed. They are strong enough in odor to sustain a very heavy weight. Complaints continue to pour in from Harlem people over the pungency of the atmosphere where this land filling goes on, but as filling with garbage is not contrary to law or ordinance, the Board of Health cannot interfere, except to

DISINFECT THE FILTH.

This they do under the inspection of Dr. Viele, at the landing place foot of 104th street, East River. The garbage is brought in boatloads from the lower landings, and Dr. Viele proposes that it be disinfected below, instead of at the upper landing. This prospect certainly appears very reasonable, as there is no necessity for tainting all East River with its foulness; but a new idea takes a long time to get through the heads of Health Commissioners, and they are not likely to accept this one until the cholera has left us.

THE RENDERING COMPANY

on Thirty-eighth street and North River were to have closed their doors and ceased business on the 10th inst. Yesterday morning, the 12th, found the company pursuing their regular vocation, as cheerily and happily as skylarks. They own an immense old boat, said to be an ex-gunboat, which performed deeds of honor and glory during the war, but that is a supposition too awful for belief; and on this old boat the Rendering Company render the refuse of the markets and the slaughter houses into lard and tallow. Their fumes permeate the shores of the North River from Fiftieth street down to Thirtieth. The air is heavy and sodden with their smells. They have always been a nuisance over which the patience of the Health Board has always been wearied out. On the 10th instant, consequently, they were ordered to clear out, but they had not done so yesterday. In reply to mild inquiries from health officials why they had not cleared out they responded that the dock where their boat lies is low of water, and they cannot move the boat. In consequence they cannot clear out, and, though not so naturally, in consequence, they continue work where they are, and pretty effectual work, too. Seven hundred barrels of offal were landed at their doorways for rendering on Friday night alone. The Health officials examined the water in the dock and found it really the case that the boat was aground, and they directed that the dock be dredged out so that the boat, with its cargo of stenches, could sail away. This order necessitated consultation, however, with the Department of Docks, who will make observation as to the necessity for dredging on Monday. If it is decided to dredge quite likely at this time of year the dredging machine has engagements ahead for a month, and cannot do this work at once. The New York Rendering Company in consequence will be left to pursue their legitimate business, unvexed by litigations or Health orders, until the Summer ends.

THE OFFAL WAR IN BROOKLYN.

An Open Air Indignation Meeting in Williamsburg Last Night.

Pursuant to a call signed by the Rev. Dr. Porter, Bernhardt Peters and other leading citizens of the Nineteenth ward, a mass meeting was held near the fountain, Bedford avenue, Williamsburg, last night, for the purpose of remonstrating against the continuance of the offal dock at the Wallabout.

At nine o'clock Mr. Robert Macoy mounted the extensive platform erected for the occasion, and called the meeting to order. After stating the purpose of the meeting he nominated Dr. Hurd for chairman and Joseph T. Sackett for secretary. Both gentlemen were elected by acclamation. On taking the chair Dr. Hurd, a venerable old gentleman with milk-white hair, gave forcible expression to his feelings in regard to the question under consideration. He warned the city authorities that if the voice of the meeting was not heeded by them more effective means would be resorted to to remove the intolerable nuisance that was endangering the health of the citizens of the Nineteenth ward. He was loudly applauded.

Mr. B. PETERS followed in a still more indignant strain, demanding that the nuisance must be abated at any cost.

After remarks by ex-Supervisor Scholes, Mr. Ames, ex-Justice Dailey and others, all of whom strongly denounced the city authorities for making the Wallabout a common nuisance, the meeting adjourned.

Among the attentive listeners to the orators were Offal Contractor Clark and Aldermen Nolan and Zindel.

JUMPING THE TRACK WITH FATAL RESULTS.

MONTGOMERY, WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., July 12, 1873.

The sleeping car of the eastern bound train on the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad jumped the track near New River Bridge this morning and rolled over a small embankment. The brakeman was killed and the sleeping car conductor had his leg broken. Some half a dozen of the passengers were badly hurt, but all escaped serious injury.

The monthly concert of Morning Star Sunday school will be addressed at half-past two P. M. by Rev. R. S. McArthur and Dr. Cameron.

The "Invisible Preacher"—Important Periods in Young Men's Lives.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

There are thousands of persons in New York and neighboring cities who, instead of going to church, buy the HERALD on Sunday mornings, and under the soothing influence of a cigar lay off in luxurious ease. To reach this class and to add a feature to the already interesting religious department of the HERALD the "Invisible Preacher" ascends his rostrum and in trumpet tones calls all non-churchgoers to give him their attention. Young men seldom stop to consider that the most critical and important period of their lives is between their twentieth and thirtieth years. It is the hinge upon which the door of their future life opens by time; the years when prudent programmes should be formed; the time when a dollar laid by leads the owner to independence, perhaps to fame and fortune; while, on the other hand, a silver mounted walking cane, a cigar or a glass of intoxicating liquor may lead the participant to State Prison or the scaffold. These are the seeds which, if sown, will respectively produce their own fruit in due season. At the present moment we can point to a man who was led by a fancy walking cane to within a few yards of the scaffold, from which he may yet be suspended; while what ruin has not that "first glass" wrought! From twenty to thirty—ah! what precious years, especially the first few, in which a life of happiness and honor among men may be chosen! The first principle to attain this is economy without stint, love of business, love of home, and last, though the greatest duty of all, the regular attendance at your respective churches. This will keep alive the spirit of God in your hearts and enable you to deal fairly with your fellow man from day to day. The single man's Sunday monotony is broken by his two visits to church, while he feels the satisfaction that he has performed the duty of a Christian. The family man feels proud in escorting his wife and happy offspring. In fact, the whole scene, if complete, includes all God's people thronging the highways and all the glorious sounds of the Sabbath mingled. Truly this would be the reflection of Heaven! And now to give a few points of advice concerning the success or failure of the basis which everybody is supposed to lay the first few years after maturity. As an eccentric person of our day remarked, "Never expect any profit from any source except by labor." If you should have commenced as an engineer be an engineer and nothing else. You may find a fortune in that calling, as thousands already have, but they were dreamers of their work.

And here we come to that most critical of all human creatures in the walks of life, the millionnaire merchant's son. He had never boarded at $4 50 per week in an attic in Broome street and done porter's duty in a merchant's office. No. He was ordered from Harvard by his father, made a partner and assigned his department in the office. Here we shall leave him until his thirtieth year, and if we find him then wedded to his business he has laid the right basis and is safe. The other sons of millionnaires, who had entered under similar circumstances, be assured the majority of them, on seeing the respectable balances of their fathers' books, felt a pen too heavy and figures too much a bore. Then comes the clerk, who ranks next to the members of the firm. Strict economy should be his undeviating rule, and at the end of his probation he will have his basis laid, such as it is. Finally and in general, let nobody, who has made a fortune in a place, or is making one, or a clerk who is doing tolerably well and is offered a few dollars in an opposite office, ever change.

THE INVISIBLE PREACHER.

The Destiny of This Earth—The Responsibility of Man to the Almighty.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

If mankind could realize the terrible consequences of their unrepented, wicked lives here, as bearing on their eternal welfare, they would be amazed, and seek diligently to repent and do works meet for repentance. Little do they realize the terrible truths contained in the Word of God. They do not seem to be aware that the Almighty God has at His command every resource, both in the natural and spiritual universe, either to damn or bless, according to our obedience or disobedience of His commands as laid down in His Holy Scriptures. They do not know that this earth is reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of the ungodly (II. Peter, iii. 7). The writer of this can testify to a positive experience in regard to the truth of the Holy Bible. Its spiritual illumination combines with nature and reveals that this earth is destined to become a molten lava sphere at the day of judgment, wherein all the unrepentant ungodly are to have their part of torment fovever. This is no hallucination of the writer's mind; so far from it, it is the direct illumination of God's truth, both in the Bible and in nature.

The collaterals of truth in the natural and the same in the spiritual (in the revealed) word focus in the mind illuminations beyond and superior to the mere learned superficialities of this age, both in regard to the believing and unbelieving world, and the writer makes bold to say that the above most intense of all truth is presented in the Holy Scriptures and in nature.

The writer of this is not alone in the enlightenment in regard to the above truth; he could mention at least three of the most prominent minds now living who are in harmony in regard to it—men of undoubted prominence and ability, and whose calling and deep intuitions guarantee their positive insight in the matter. Now it behooves our people and every people to be aware of this divinely terrible truth and to act accordingly. A knowledge of such terrible truth as this should bring men to their senses everywhere. In this country (the United States) we know how terribly demoralized large numbers of the people are, both in high and low degree. Look at the murders, robberies (public and private) and wickedness of all kinds and tyranny of office and wealth, which are not only destroying our heaven-gifted country, but which are jeopardizing the bodies and souls of the people for eternity. Awake, then, and repent, and do works meet for repentance, if you are not utterly blind to this most awful revelation of God, both in nature and in His Holy Word.

JOHN McCHESNEY.

Science Sustaining Revelation.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

In the recent lectures at Cambridge by Professor Agassiz, on the "Method of Creation," he not only conclusively refutes the theory of Darwin, but, in his eighth lecture, in treating on the "mental faculties," adduces such cogent reasons on the part of science to the upholding of our religious belief that I would claim a portion of your columns to lay them before the public in your Sunday issue. He says:—"Are all mental powers one? Is there only one kind of mental power throughout the whole animal kingdom, differing only in intensity and range of manifestations? In a series of admirable lectures given recently in Boston by Dr. Brown-Séquard, he laid before his audience a new philosophy of mental powers. Through physiological experiments, combined with a careful study and comparison of pathological cases, he has come to the conclusion that there are two sets, or a double set, of mental powers in the human organism, or acting through the human organism, essentially different from each other. The one may be designated as one ordinary, conscious intelligence; the other as a superior power, which controls our better nature, solves, sometimes suddenly and unexpectedly, nay, even in sleep, our problems and perplexities; suggests the right thing at the right time, acting through us without conscious action of our own, though susceptible of training and elevation. Or, perhaps, I should rather say our own organism may be trained to a more plastic instrument through which this power acts in us. I do not see why this view should not be accepted. It is in harmony with facts as far as we know them. The experiments through which my friend, Dr. Brown-Séquard, has satisfied himself that the subtle mechanism of the human frame, about which we know so little in connection with mental processes, is sometimes acted upon by a power outside of us, as familiar with that organization as we are ignorant of it, are no less acute than they are curious and interesting. If this view be just, the question arises whether these faculties exist to a certain degree and within certain limits in all higher animals, and whether they are found at all in the lower animals. In the decision of this question anatomical considerations cannot fail to be of importance."

May we not take issue with Professor Agassiz on the point whether anatomical considerations can possibly be of much importance in determining whether (I quote his own words) "our own organism may be trained to a more plastic instrument, through which this power acts;" and which power, in a few lines previous, is termed "a power outside of us, as familiar with our organization as we are ignorant, are no less acute than they are curious and interesting."

The scientists, I humbly submit, have evidently, from a scientific standpoint, discerned "a power outside of us," as above quoted, which revelation, through Paul and others, had long before taught us. Not that there possibly is a double set of mental powers in the human organism, "but that the alternative must conclusively be adopted that there is a power outside of us as familiar with our organization as we are ignorant," and that that power is the spirit of God. And that we are (Romans viii., 14) "led by the spirit of God," which Paige suitably exemplifies thus:—"To be led by the Spirit of God is to conform to His will, because we believe it to be His will; to obey His influences, because we believe they are His; to submit ourselves wholly and confidingly to His guidance." In the same chapter we read at verse 16, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God," and Professor Stuart, of Andover, who is surely sufficiently orthodox for any one to follow, says thereon:—"The Divine Spirit impresses on our minds the consciousness that we are the sons of God; bears witness to us that such relationship exists, and thus excites in our hearts a filial spirit, or spirit of adoption, or spirit proper to adopted children. So far as either precedes the other it is more easy to conceive that the consciousness of sonship is the cause of a filial spirit than that a filial spirit causes the consciousness of sonship. He who loves not God as a Father has no good reason to believe that he is characteristically a son of God." Science, therefore, unwittingly confirms revelation.

Universal Salvation—Why Not?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

Your correspondent "Ami" seems to be greatly exercised upon the subject of "universal salvation." He regards it as a question of the "utmost importance." He exclaims, "Is there a solution of this question? It seems as if there might be, for this, which is vital in religion, should be settled first." Again he says, "If we need a new revelation let us try to obtain that." Now, I would like to inquire if this question or subject of universal salvation is really either a vital question in religion or if it is even one of any considerable practical moment. Supposing it were well settled to the satisfaction of all men, either that all would be saved or that there is an endless hell for the wicked, would this universal belief change the real condition of things in the other world? Would it change the actual destiny of a single human being who enters that world? If it would not, then in what sense can this subject be regarded as a vital or even a practical one in religion, and why should men trouble themselves about the views of their neighbors upon this non-essential question and separate from each other on account of differences of opinion thereon? Both Revelation and reason teach us that heaven is not a pen or an enclosure into which a man can be let as a matter of favor, irrespective of his actual character or life. Heaven must be within us before we can enter the gates of the Celestial City. Heaven is to be gained by right living or by believing in the Lord and striving to keep His commandments, and not by believing that we shall be saved. Our believing or not believing that we and all men will be saved will not change the final destiny of a single human soul, unless it in some way either leads us into evil on the one hand or to shun evil as sin and to live a better life on the other. Let us look a moment at what constitutes heaven and also hell, what it is to be saved and what we are saved from.

We are taught in the Sacred Scriptures, and more clearly and beautifully in the Revelations made by the Lord to the men of this new age through Emmanuel Swedenborg, that heaven consists in loving the Lord and neighbor and obedience to the Divine commands supremely, and that every man's ruling love governs his destiny. If we love our neighbors we shall neither cheat, deceive, backbite nor harm them in any manner, but strive to do them good in every possible way; this will lead to unity and peace and to the happiness which is heavenly. Hell consists in loving self, the world and sensual gratifications supremely; or, in other words, it consists in being governed by selfish and sensual thoughts and affections, and placing our chief delight therein and thus leading an evil life. To be saved, then, consists in being saved from thinking, willing and doing wrong, or evil, or from breaking the commandments in thought, word or act; and whether all men are saved, or will be or not, depends entirely upon whether they are willing and desirous of living the life of heaven and setting themselves diligently about doing so by seeking the truth, shunning evil and striving to love and do good to all. The Lord calls on all men to lead a heavenly life. He helps all who try to help themselves, and He, with all good men on earth and in heaven, earnestly desires that all men should be saved. He is no respecter of persons and has no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but if men are not willing to be saved—not willing to be saved from sinning nor from the selfish gratification of their perverted loves of rule, approbation, money or sensual appetites—how can the Lord save them without destroying their freedom or manhood, and thus reducing them to the level of the beasts that perish, which would be to annihilate them? for a man's ruling love is the very centre of his life. Selfish men in this world must be restrained by laws and punishments from injuring others and from interfering with their rights; and, of course, similar restraints will be required in the next world, for death is simply the putting off of the material body and causes no change in a man's ruling love; and selfishness never ceases to court lust, envy, deceit, hate, and make a hell, and a very hot one, too, if these passions are not restrained. The fire of hell is selfishness in its various manifestations.

If your correspondent will read Swedenborg's "Heaven and Hell" he will find that we have a new revelation, which appeals to his highest reason, and he will cease to be troubled about this question, unless he has dwelt upon this subject so long and confirmed himself so fully in his views that he has come to regard it of more importance than the practical doctrines of life contained in the Word. A gentleman once inquired of Swedenborg as to the state of a friend who had died some time before. Swedenborg informed him that he had seen and conversed with him in the spiritual world, and that he was getting along passably well, but was still troubling himself greatly about the final restoration of all men. Who was benefited by his thus tormenting himself?

The Lord is good to all, and His tender mercies are around all His creatures. Swedenborg has shown us that the Lord permits no one to stray off into hell who is willing to be led by His angels, who attend every man at death into heaven. The angels never leave the new comer, we are told; but the evil man parts from the angels, for he does not like their company. Neither here nor hereafter does the Lord compel any man to love Him and his neighbor supremely.

Roman Catholic Church Mission to the Sultan.

Monsignor Paul, Patriarch of the Syrians, one of the Oriental rites in communion with the See of Rome, has arrived in Turkey from Diarbekir, and is staying at Ghedik Pacha's, in Stamboul. The object of His Eminence's visit to Constantinople is to obtain a renewal of his firman of investiture from the Ottoman government, and to arrange some other Syrian matters with the Porte.

The Methodist Church in China.

The Rev. W. N. Hall, English Methodist missionary, has been presented with a purse of fifty guineas as a mark of the esteem in which he is held by the foreign community at Tien-tsin. The list of subscribers to the testimonial includes the names of the Consuls for Great Britain, Germany and the United States, the Commissioner of Customs and most of the merchants and other residents. Mr. Hall goes home on furlough, after nearly fourteen years' service in China.

Ministerial Movements and Changes.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. R. Merriman, of Angelica, N. Y., has removed to Schenectady; Rev. Thomas Leyse, of Clymer, N. Y., has taken charge of the church in Oakland, Pa.; Rev. G. M. Preston, of Independence, Iowa, has gone to Oldtown, Iowa; Rev. E. V. Bunker, of Laconia, N. H., has commenced a pastorate in East Enosburg, same State; Rev. R. H. Bowles, of Greenbush, N. Y., has removed to Jewett City, Conn.; Rev. C. Tilbury has resigned at Mount Ayr to take a charge at Leon, Iowa; Rev. Jonas Woodward has resigned at Bristol, Ill., to take a charge at Tamasoa, Ill.; Rev. W. W. Wilgus, a graduate of the Union Seminary, at Chicago, has accepted a call to the Pine street Baptist church, St. Louis, Mo. The colored Baptists of Kentucky have organized a General Association for themselves. They are to meet in council in Paris, Ky., August 14. Thirty-six years ago the Baptists numbered 30,000 members in Kentucky. They now have 50 associations, 1,200 churches, 700 ministers, and 90,000 white and 30,000 colored members. The Campbellites have 40,000 members in that State. By a novel method of gathering together old paper, through the efforts of the children, the Sunday school of the North Baptist church has received about one hundred and sixty dollars, the proceeds of nearly two tons and a quarter of paper. It is to be devoted to the purchase of a banner. We shall expect to hear of more old paper festivals. Southeastern Nebraska, according to a correspondent, has only one self-supporting Baptist church, and very few pastors who devote themselves solely to the work of the ministry. Rev. Isaac Elkin dedicated a new house of worship recently, at Washington, Ind., for the Mount Olive congregation. Rev. S. C. Moore, of Pennsylvania, has settled with the Baptist church at Afton, Iowa. The completed church edifice belonging to the First Baptist church of Hastings, Minn., was dedicated to the worship of God June 26. Rev. W. H. Batson has resigned at St. Charles, Minn., for the purpose of completing his education in a theological seminary. Rev. J. R. Munroe has resigned as pastor of the First Baptist church in Oakfield, Mich., to take effect the last Sabbath in August. Rev. Charles A. Hayden, of the Chicago Seminary, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Akron, O. Mr. Thomas Moore was ordained on the 28th ultimo, at Youngtown, Ohio. Rev. H. C. Mable has resigned as pastor at Rockford, Ill., and accepted a call to Oak Park, one of the suburbs of Chicago. Rev. G. W. Clark, D. D., has resigned his pastorate at Ballston Spa, where he has labored successfully for five years, and accepted a call to the church in Somerville, N. J. Rev. David Coyne, of the Presbytery of Marion, Ohio, has joined the Baptist church. Rev. J. H. Parks, of Manayunk, has accepted the call of the Calvary church of Philadelphia, to take effect the 1st of September. The corner stone of the Manatawna Baptist church, Philadelphia, was laid yesterday. The Manayunk Baptist church, under the pastorate of Rev. J. H. Parks, has commenced the erection of a brick building at the rear of their meeting house, so as to improve the pulpit recess and furnish ample retiring rooms on baptismal occasions. Rev. Joseph L. James has been called to supply the pulpit of Mount Zion Baptist church, Philadelphia, for six months. The North Star Baptist Mission has bought a lot, 80x94, at the corner of Seventeenth street and Susquehanna avenue, Philadelphia, and proposes to have a building ready for dedication on the first Sunday in September. The Sunday school now numbers over two hundred and is constantly increasing. The Gethsemane Baptist church hope to enter their building, now in process of erection, in September next.

METHODIST.

The statistics of the Lexington (colored) Conference show the total membership to be 9,472, while the aggregate of Sunday school scholars is 2,167, or only about one-fourth of their membership. Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in which Rev. Dr. Crooks, editor of the Methodist in this city, was for some years a professor, has conferred on him the honorary degree of LL. D. Rev. J. S. Willis, formerly of this city, now of Stamford, Conn., was the poet of the day at the late Commencement of Dickinson. He is reported to have won golden opinions. The services at Sea Cliff camp meeting have been solemnized during the week by the announcement of the sudden death of Rev. Charles G. Burdish, who for three years previous to the last session of his Conference was the pastor of the village church there and one of the originators of the camp meeting enterprise. His disease was neuralgia of the heart, from which he had been suffering for a few weeks, but was apparently recovering when a relapse came on, and he passed away suddenly on Saturday morning, July 5. Brother Burdish was one of five brothers who are in the Methodist ministry. A younger brother, Rev. W. W. Burdish, is pastor of the Second avenue Methodist Episcopal church, in this city; another brother is a member of the Wyoming Conference and two belong to the Minnesota Conference. Brother Burdish was thirty-nine years of age. Rev. Dr. Howard, late President of the Ohio University, is recruiting his shattered health in Santa Clara, Cal. Rev. A. B. Gregg, P. E. of the Herkimer district, Central New York Conference, is spending his vacation in California. Rev. Dr. Wild, of the Seventh avenue Methodist Episcopal church, Brooklyn (lately of Canada), writes to the Canada Christian Advocate in opposition to the proposed union of the Methodist bodies in the Dominion. If the Methodist Episcopal Church remains faithful he anticipates returning to her fold again; but he declares he never can be a member of the United Church. Rev. Dr. Thomas Pearson, Indian preacher and interpreter at the Klamath agency, writes to the Pacific Christian Advocate concerning a revival at that place which has closed up nearly all the gambling and liquor saloons and crowded the church at every service. The time for holding the Martha's Vineyard camp meeting has been changed from the 18th to the 25th of August. Dr. J. H. Vincent left this city on Monday for the West, to attend a State Sunday School Convention at Minneapolis, Minn., and another at Omaha, Neb. At a regular meeting of the Methodist preachers of Newark and vicinity last week a resolution was adopted asking the preachers of the city to preach at least one sermon to their congregations on Sabbath desecration some time during the month of July. An original letter from Francis Asbury, first Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, written to Dr. Martin Ruter, of New Orleans, has been found among the papers of the latter by his daughter, and is published in the Methodist Protestant. It is dated at Baltimore, March 11, 1810, and speaks encouragingly of the increase of membership (7,000) in the three Conferences of New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont the year previous. Himself and Bishop McKendree were then ploughing the field together, though Asbury was sixty-five years old and McKendree fifty-three. Now that the British Conference has got Dr. Punshon back again they hardly know what to do with him. There are only two or three charges in the city of London where his talents can be appreciated and paid for, and these are at present occupied. Westminster circuit, convenient to the houses of Parliament, is the best and fittest, it is said, for him. He has several invitations for next year, but can't accept any yet, because he is talked of as President of the Conference and as Secretary of the Mission Board. He is also suggested as a theological professor in the Headingley Institute.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Rev. E. O. Forney, pastor of the Reformed Church of the Ascension, Norristown, Pa., has suddenly gone over to the Roman Catholic Church. He is the third pastor of this church who has successively taken the same step. The Catholic Review records the strange fact that the Charity Organization Society of London received last year for benevolent purposes £1,206 10¼d., of which it dispensed, according to the design of the donors, £157 13s. 11¼d., and the rest it gave away in salaries and incidental expenses. The sooner such a concern is wound up and put under ground the better. Rev. William J. Madden, the accomplished assistant pastor of St. Mary's church, Chicago, is in Brooklyn, visiting with friends, and taking needed rest from labors. The Church of St. Alphonsus, Greenpoint, L. I., will be dedicated on August 3. The Catholics of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., have purchased a church from the Universalists, in a fine location, and it will shortly be dedicated by Archbishop McCloskey on the name of St. Mary's. The Rev. Edward McSweeney, of New York, will assume pastoral charge. The 12th, 13th and 14th of August next, have been set apart by the Holy Father as special days of intercession throughout the whole Church for her deliverance from her present afflictions. The Litany of the Saints is the prayer enjoined, and a plenary indulgence is granted to those who say it on all three days, and who, after making confession, go to Communion on the Feast of the Assumption, August 15. To those who say the Litany with this intention on only one of these days an indulgence of seven years is granted. The Catholics are erecting a new church in Dickeyville, Ill., which they expect to complete this Summer. Rev. James Donnelly, one of the lately ordained priests of St. Michael's Seminary, Pittsburg, Pa., has been appointed assistant with the Rev. William Pollard at the Church of St. John's, Birmingham. Rev. Father Kelley, of St. Michael's church, Philadelphia, Pa., was drowned on Sunday last while bathing in the surf at Atlantic City, N. J. He was an expert swimmer, but while in the water he was seized with an apoplectic fit, his head fell back, and he died almost instantly. The Rev. Father Mee has been transferred by Archbishop McCloskey to the assistant pastorate of St. Augustine's, Sing Sing. Father Newman, just from college, has been appointed to assist the Rev. Father O'Farrell at Rondout; he takes the place of Father Curley, who is about to be installed in St. Peter's church, Barclay street. Father Salter is appointed to St. Patrick's, Father Gleeson to St. Mary's and Father O'Dougherty to St. Jerome's, Mott Haven. They are all young preachers, fresh from their ecclesiastical studies. The Catholics of Kentucky number 130,000. Dr. W. Henry Warren, writing to the Christian Advocate of this city, concerning the moral condition of Rome, Italy, says there are 365 churches in that city, one for every day in the year except leap year, and they have lavished on them the best efforts of the best endowed natures. They have the grandest and holiest associations, are magnificent in themselves, are the highest result of man's architectural ability, a single one of them costing twice as much as all the Methodist churches in the United States, and most of them decorated with the best designs of artists that God dowered with wondrous ability. At their altars is an almost perpetual service, where priests, gorgeous in silk and gold, intone mellifluous prayers; where tidy boys swing censers of perfume, and where magnificent voices chant anthems sacred for 2,000 years. The laziness, rapacity and moral vileness of priests in that city he says has passed into a proverb. The sons of Eli can make themselves vile while they handle holy vessels. He adds:—I have seen them joke in the midst of the most solemn scenes and while engaged in the most serious services. And he gives illustrations of this spirit which came under his own observation. He says he never saw so clearly the utter uselessness of machinery, manners and millinery for salvation. Art has power, but sin has more. He never felt more like a heathen in his life than when he stood in the Trinita dei Pellegrini to look at Guido's picture.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Rev. J. S. Atwell has become rector of St. Stephen's church, Savannah, Ga. Rev. H. M. Barbour has left Madalin, N. Y., for St. John's church, Woodside, N. J. Rev. W. N. Dunham, of Peru, Ind., has taken charge of St. James' Mission, Indianapolis. Rev. A. Goldsborough has assumed the rectorship of Christ church, Warwick, N. Y. Rev. F. Harrison has taken charge of St. Paul's church, Troy, N. Y. Rev. S. F. Mines has gone to St. John's church, Peoria, Ill. Rev. C. S. Percival has been transferred to Emmanuel church, Rockport, Ill. Rev. W. S. Speirs has become pastor of Grace church, Canton, Mo. Rev. A. S. Teutschell, of Humboldt, Mo., has settled at Wichita, Kansas. The St. George's (Hanover square) vestry have adopted an address to the Bishop of London, praying His Lordship to exert his authority in protecting the wives and families of Churchmen from those clergymen who are seeking to introduce auricular confession, from which it would seem that the high churchmen are not going to have it all their own way without some show of resistance on the part of those more sensibly inclined. The pew-rental system has been abolished in St. Paul's, Council Bluffs. The voluntary system works to a charm. Rev. W. T. Lloyd has resigned the charge of Trinity church, Weymouth, Mass., owing to impaired health. The new Memorial church being built in Hoboken, N. J., by Mrs. Stevens, is rapidly approaching completion, and when finished will be one of the handsomest edifices in the State. The Episcopalians in Chicago are organizing the Cicago Church Guild, of which the Bishop is president and the rectors of the several churches vice presidents. Among other things the Society will aim to establish a thorough system of missionary visitation.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbyterian church and society of Andover, N. J., have extended a call to the Rev. Bentley S. Foster, of Dunmore, Pa., to become their pastor. Rev. J. H. Clark has resigned his pastorate at Castile, N. Y., and that pulpit is again vacant. Rev. Lemuel S. Pomeroy was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Savannah, N. Y., on the 2d inst. Mr. W. C. Templeton has just been received and set over the Lombard street Colored Presbyterian church Philadelphia. Rev. G. Warrington, of Atco, N. Y., has resigned and gone to Beech Creek, N. J. The Walnut street Presbyterian church, West Philadelphia, Rev. S. W. Dana, pastor, has increased its membership in five years from 149 to 354, and its benevolent contributions from $2,921 to $7,838 per annum, besides building a neat chapel at a cost of $15,246. Shiloh (colored) Presbyterian church, formerly of Prince and Marion streets, has deserted its old building and commenced holding services in Republican Hall, Broadway and Twenty-third street. The old church edifice is to be sold for business purposes and a new building is to be put up in a central location up town. Rev. Dr. H. H. Garnet is the pastor. The Rev. Alfred Kellogg, who has been preaching to the Scotch church in Fourteenth street (late Dr. Sutphen's) with much acceptance for several months, concludes his labors there today, and during the Summer vacation the church will be thoroughly repaired within and without. Dr. John Thompson, of the Thirty-fourth street church, has gone on a short trip to Europe, and Rev. George J. Mingins will supply his pulpit in the meantime. Rev. M. D. Kneeland was last week installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Waterloo, N. Y. His two predecessors in the pulpit, whose ministry occupied over half a century, were present to bid him welcome. Rev. A. Baker, of Huron, Ohio, has gone to Norwalk, same State. Rev. L. S. Handly has been called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church at Bethsalem, Ala. Rev. J. G. Carson, of Xenia, Ohio, has received a call to the pastoral charge of the United Presbyterian church in Chicago, lately under the pastoral care of Rev. J. M. Baugh. The Rev. J. R. McDougall, of Florence, has purchased, for $10,000, a suppressed Roman Catholic church and monastery for the use of the Santa Croce schools and the Free Church of that city. The Rev. William Speer, D. D., Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education, with the cordial approval of the Board, has gone to Europe for a few months of rest and recreation. The Rev. E. R. Beadle, D. D., and the Rev. George F. Wiswell, D. D., of Philadelphia, also sailed a few weeks since. The Rev. Thomas Murphy, D. D., and the Rev. J. Addison Henry, also of Philadelphia, have been in Europe since May.

CONGREGATIONAL AND UNITARIAN.

Only ten of the Congregational churches in Kansas are self-supporting. Twenty-two churches have been organized the past year, averaging twelve members each; and sixteen of these have been supplied with ministers. Massachusetts has now 507 Congregational churches and 81,462 members therein. Last year 2,719 of these were added on profession of faith. These figures show a gain of four churches and 900 members during the year. Rev. Edward Hawes has resigned his nine years' pastorate to go to the Central church, Philadelphia. He expects to go to the North church, New Haven, Conn. In consequence of protracted ill-health Rev. D. B. Gray has resigned the charge of the Second Congregational church, in Oakland, California. Mr. William H. Woodwell has been ordained as a State evangelist for Maine. Rev. J. F. Merriam has resigned his pastorate over the First Congregational church in Farmington, Conn. The Rev. Joseph Parker, D. D., of London, the author of "Ecce Deus," is coming to this country next month for a short visit. Dr. Parker is a man of note among English Congregationalists, and he will have a warm welcome from his brethren in America. Rev. William A. P. Willard, of the Unitarian church at Sudbury, Mass., has tendered his resignation. Rev. Mr. Irish was installed pastor of the Unitarian church at Northboro, July 9, Rev. Mr. Horton, of Leominster, preaching the sermon. Rev. L. E. Beckwith was ordained to the work of the ministry and installed as pastor of Christ church (Unitarian), Augusta, Me., on Wednesday evening, July 2. Rev. P. F. Barnard has resigned his pastorate of the Congregational church, Westhampton, N. Y. The Congregationalists of St. Paul, Minn., have erected a new structure—said to be one of the finest in the State—which was dedicated for public worship on Thursday evening, June 19. The Rev. C. M. Terry was the same day installed pastor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Rev. Dr. Stone recently delivered a sermon in San Francisco on the Chinese question, taking ground against exclusion and persecution. The average salary of 61,000 Protestant clergymen in the United States has been put down by one who has been gathering the facts at $700 per annum, and while the whole receive an average of not over $500, about one-third do not receive $300. On the 29th ultimo Mr. C. Clever was ordained to the Gospel ministry and installed pastor of the Reformed church at Columbia, Pa. The corner stone of a new church for the use of the Reformed and Lutheran congregations was laid a few weeks ago at Conyngham, Pa. Mr. M. L. Fritch was ordained to the ministry of the Reformed church at Alleghany, Pa., on the 28th ultimo. Mr. Charles W. Good was on the 26th ult. ordained and installed pastor of the Reformed Dutch church at Germantown, Ohio. Rev. J. F. Waterhouse, late of Clinton, Mass., has accepted the unanimous invitation of the Board of Directors of the "Children's Unitarian Mission," Boston, to the position of one of the ministers of that institution. The Christian sect of Bethel, Iowa, and of Miami, Ohio, last month dedicated churches in these respective places. They expect to dedicate another near Richwood, Ohio, next Sunday, 20th instant. The first Christian school in Jerusalem was opened in 1817 with nine members; now there are five schools, with upwards of four hundred scholars. Rev. Peter Felts, of Johnstown, N. Y., has just been elected to the chair of theology in Hartwick Lutheran Seminary, N. Y.

SEA CLIFF GROVE CAMP MEETING.

A Strange Mingling of Business with Religion.

The Grounds Used for Speculative Purposes and a Steamboat Opposition.

LIFE IN THE CAMP.

Miserable Hotel Accommodations—How Services Are Conducted.

The Union Camp Meeting which has been open at Sea Cliff Grove since the 6th of the present month will close to-morrow. The meeting has not been by any means such a success as it was expected it would be, although it has the advantages of a beautiful situation and a close proximity to the city. The attendance has not been so large as it was last year, the zeal has not been so intense, the converts not so numerous—in fact, the entire proceedings have been characterized by a cold and business-like aspect, which is not at all consistent with the ideas one forms of Methodist camp meetings.

The camp meeting of the present day is not at all like what the same thing was twenty years ago. In the last generation the Methodists seemed to be inspired with more noisy zeal and exuberant enthusiasm than their descendants now are. The camp meeting was the great event of the year. Reckonings were made beforehand of the number of souls who would be plucked as brands from the burning, and experienced judges, from the size of the congregations, in the vicinity of the camp ground, could generally form a pretty shrewd guess of the number who would return to their homes no better than when they had left. In those days there were for worship, no cosey cottages or snug villas for residences, no commingling of pleasure and business with religion—all was seemingly pure and unalloyed. The services were held with no covering but the blue vault of heaven; the temporary homes of the worshippers were canvas tents; the air resounded with the loud hallelujahs of the saints and the fervent amens of the blessed; sinners were converted whether they would or no; private speculation was unknown, and if in the services there was much that was grotesque and ludicrous it was far more preferable than the institution that has succeeded it.

If Sea Cliff Grove be a specimen of the camp meeting of the present day, as it is said to be, the spectacle it presents is not at all edifying to the irreligious world. Ostensibly started as a place for Summer worshippers, where the advantages of a beautiful situation and sea bathing could be combined, it has gradually departed from its first principles until it is now run more for purposes of business than religion. "God is great, and Mohammed is his prophet." "Sea Cliff Grove is delightful; lots will be sold cheap, and God can be worshipped." Business first; religion next. This seems to be the principle on which the grove is worked, and it is not at all astonishing that the project is beginning to lack the elements of success. The increasing dearness of everything supplied to those upon the grounds is beginning to debar all but those who are wealthy from a sojourn, and the probability is that in a few years what was announced as a breathing place for the holy and the lowly will have become a fashionable watering place.

THE SITUATION OF THE GROVE

is pre-eminently attractive. The view from the cliff is very beautiful on a clear day. The waters of the Sound are visible for miles, like a sea of glass, their surface dotted with the white sails of innumerable craft of all sizes. On the opposite side New Roshelle, where Paine lies buried, meets the eye, embowered in waving foliage. The interior of the grove itself is all that could be desired. It is thickly wooded and abounds in winding walks and deep ravines, with an open space in the middle, where the Tabernacle Hotel and dining rooms have been erected. "Every prospect pleases," and were it not that Speculation's ungainly form has made itself so lamentably conspicuous it might easily become the favorite Summer retreat of Methodists. It should not for a moment be understood that the motives of the projectors consist entirely of business; there is much good intended, and doubtless much good done, but the trail of the serpent, in the shape of improvement companies, steamboat companies and other associations, cannot possibly be overlooked.

Among the families resident upon the grounds much complaint has arisen relative to the great difficulty in procuring supplies. According to a rule made by the Association a company called the Long Island Improvement Company, consisting of members who were projectors of the Grove, have the sole privilege of keeping a store upon the lands. Taking advantage of this privilege, a monopoly has been established, and exorbitant prices are charged for articles of food. Dealers from Glen Cove who want to sell goods upon the ground are compelled to pay a large percentage for the privilege of doing so, and, as a consequence of this, several grocers, butchers and bakers have been arrested while endeavoring to run the blockade, and asked to pay thirty per cent or walk off off the grounds. By what authority or by what right these arrests are made it is difficult to say, and the dealers of Glen Cove have announced their intention of appealing to law for the protection of their rights. Some of the people who have been here for several days and some who own cottages told me last evening that they considered the action of the Long Island Improvement Company altogether unjustifiable, and that when they purchased lots and built houses upon them they claimed the right to buy their provisions wherever they could get them cheapest and best. Scarcely a day elapses without a scene between the Glencovites and the police, several of the latter being on the ground.

A STEAMBOAT JOB.

When the camp meeting was in progress last year two boats touched daily at the grounds, the Seawanhaka and the Arrowsmith. The trustees of the grounds thought it would be well to have a steamship of their own, as they wanted one to run to the city in an hour and a half without making any stoppages. The owners of the Seawanhaka leased the Arrowsmith to the Sea Cliff Grove Association on the express condition that she should not touch at Glen Cove, or interfere with the business of the Seawanhaka. The Arrowsmith was no sooner in possession of the Methodists than the contract was broken. A fierce opposition was organized, the price of fare on the Arrowsmith was lowered, and she put into Glen Cove for passengers at the exact time that the other boat did. As a consequence of this, much confusion has been caused, and rows have been of frequent occurrence between the two boats, and it will be fortunate if an accident does not soon occur from this cause. It will be easily peceived that there is much that is at variance with the conduct of professing Christians in this state of affairs. But it is time now that I should speak about the services and life upon the grounds.

IN THE CAMP.

On landing from the boat you can either take a road which leads direct to the tabernacle or ascend a flight of winding steps, as straight and almost as steep as Jacob's ladder. When you get to the top the blue smoke, which you perceive wreathing from white tents, informs you that you are in the encampment. The tents are remarkably neat, and, as a general rule, so are the people who inhabit them. On the water front cottages are thickly strewed, and you are soon aware that you have met with something far different from a mere camp meeting ground. When you walk on a little further the tabernacle looms in view, looking like a huge circus tent. On the south side the hotel has been erected, and thither I bent my steps. It is called the Sea Cliff Grove, and is a long, straggling, brown building. The odor of sanctity can be discovered on coming near, and the noiseless and subdued steps of the attendants the lack of a barroom and the total absence of noise and bustle of any kind convince you that you are at no ordinary inn. On entering a rather neat looking office meets you at one side, in the centre of which is a desk, at which a man of meek and holy aspect sits writing. This is the clerk, but he has little of the typical clerk about him. He is very civil, very attentive, and treats all guests, as if they were part of the same household of faith. He told me that single rooms were seventy-five cents a night, and double rooms, one dollar and fifty cents, and that I could get my meals on the European plan. Having heard of the privations of the single rooms, I determined to try one and find whether the stories told me about them were correct. In the meantime, I went in search of the washroom, but could find none, until I inquired of a darkey waiter on the porch. After hesitating a moment, he said:—

"It'll cost you ten cents, boss."

I thought this arrangement rather strange, but acquiesced in it, and was led below, when a basin of water was supplied me. While I was washing the waiter eyed me wistfully and said:—

"Come from New York, boss?"

I said "Yes," and he said, "For God's sake, sir, have you brought anything with you to drink?" On finding I had none he looked perfectly miserable, but said if I would pay him well he would procure me cigars. I declined his offer and went to the restaurant, where the prices are very high, the attendance very bad and the provender anything but good. It was now half-past seven o'clock, and the bell of the tabernacle was tolling for evening worship.

THE EVENING SERVICE.

Mingling with the men godly, I proceeded towards the Tabernacle, where as yet but a small congregation had assembled. The floor was covered with hay, and the seats were arranged in circles, as in a theatre. In fact, there was a large platform for the accommodation of the clergymen and the fathers in the Methodist Israel. The people came in slowly and it was nearly eight o'clock when they all arrived, and then the huge building was about one-tenth filled. The audience looked to be a very respectable one, but the faces of most of the women were decidedly plain; in fact, it was difficult to imagine how so many homely-looking females had found each other out. Perhaps it was religion that had imparted the severe hue to their countenances, or it might be the sickly glare of the oil lights; but, whatever it was, no one would care to stake the reputation of the American women for beauty upon those in the assemblage of last evening. In the background there were some decidedly pretty looking girls, but they were visitors from Glen Cove and did not reside upon the ground. The services were commenced with singing. The hymn announced was that favorite one, commencing "Oh, for a closer walk with God." It was read by the minister with an entire absence of all the rules of elocution, and sung by the congregation with an utter disregard of all the rules of music. After singing there was a prayer, in which there was a strong effort made to awaken enthusiasm, but it failed. The "Amens" were not so fervent as in days of yore; the "Yes, Lords" were not so numerous or intense, and there was an amount of giggling done by the younger girls which would make the bones of their grandmothers rattle in their coffins could they see it. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. P. Willis, on the exhaustless subject of backsliding. In the handling of the theme there was nothing new. The voice of the speaker lacked volume, and could not be heard to the outer end of the building, and

HIS DELIVERY WAS UNGRACEFUL.

He several times addressed the Deity in his discourse and spoke to Him much more dictatorially and familiarly than he would to a brother minister. At the conclusion of the sermon an old lady took up the hymn, "Just as I am, without one plea." The hymn was heartily joined in by the congregation, but the melody was bad, the leading singers getting to the end of the verse while the balance would be at the third line. When the singing was concluded a clergyman announced that all who wanted to be saved had only to step up to the front of the Tabernacle and kneel down and their desire would be gratified. Tempting as this invitation was there was a very faint response and several elders and clergymen commenced speaking at once, urging the same theme. Still the people did not respond and the singing was commenced again, during which a few people went forward; then a lady with a loud, harsh voice and a wonderful intonation, prayed, while the clergymen scattered among the audience and knelt beside all who showed signs of penitence. The singing and praying were kept up until eleven o'clock, and the sound of stifled sighs and sobs could be heard from the penitent form. The building was finally cleared and there was a general rush made for tent and cottage.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS.

I went to the hotel, and with fear and trembling asked to be shown to my room. Treading several flights of stairs, my guide went through a series of winding corridors and finally unlocked a room which he said was my dormitory. Good heavens, such a room! There was barely room to walk in, and the diminutive bed and a chair, with a dwarfish washstand, sufficed to fill the space so that there was scarcely breathing ground left. The only resource you had in getting into a room like this was to get as speedily as possible to bed, in the faint hope of procuring some relief. The bed looked clean, but here, alas! its attractions ended. There were two pillows, a straw and a feather one. When you used both your head was so situated that you could see nothing but the moon, and when you used the feather one alone your feet were pointing to the ceiling, while your head looked downwards. The bed was just one half too short for me, and I had to lie in it coiled up like a snake, a position not at all conducive to rest. The room had one advantage—it was not ceiled over. If it had been, God help the sleepers. There was a large number of rooms on each floor, and it was utterly impossible to sleep until everyone in the house had retired, as the noise made in the most distant part of the house would seem as if it were in the next room to you, and the motion of any one passing in the corridor would jolt you in your bed. Finally all was peace in the house, and after vainly trying to straighten myself out I fell asleep and slept until the peculiar people who awake about four o'clock roused me up. After this there was no chance for sleeping. The devout risers prayed audibly in their rooms, and, not content with praying, they sang lustily. This devotion, while no doubt proper and good in its way, seemed to be entirely out of place at four or five o'clock in the morning in a crowded hotel.

THE TRIP HOME.

The boat was announced to start at seven o'clock, and many who intended to go upon her had risen early to catch the fresh breezes that were blowing from the Sound. The morning was beautiful, and amply repaid one for the discomforts of the night. Trees and grass were shrouded in their mantle of brightest green, the white-winged yachts were out upon the water, and a delightful breeze was sweeping over the Sound. When the boat had taken on board its passengers it started for Glen Cove, where the Seawanhaka was already waiting. The two boats very nearly collided, and some sharp words passed between the crews and captains. The one or two passengers which the Arrowsmith procured had to get on board by means of a plank, and then she started for the city. The voyage down is very pleasant, and is a good preparation for the toils of the day.

LEXINGTON AVENUE SYNAGOGUE.

Biblical Sanitary Laws—Suggestions for the Board of Health—Their Need of Biblical Study—Discourse by Rev. Dr. Huebsch.

Yesterday Rev. Dr. Huebsch, in lieu of a regular sermon, gave his people a practical talk on sanitary matters, basing his remarks upon Leviticus xiv., 34-36—"When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession, and he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house, then the priest shall command that they empty the house before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean; and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house." Many persons, the Doctor said, may deem it inappropriate to speak about this text before a modern audience. The subject belongs to the hoary past, and is out of time and place here; it is applicable solely to the land of Canaan. But, while this objection is in a sense true and proper, there is a higher sense in which this, like every other command of the Lord, stretches beyond time and locality, and is applicable always and everywhere. The connection between this ordinance and the preceding prescriptions shows the never ceasing importance of its bearing. This section of the law begins with an enumeration of several diseases incident to the human body; then follow directions touching unhealthy or leprous garments, concluding with the regulations concerning plagued dwellings. The sum and substance of these laws and ordinances condensed into a single phrase is that cleanliness is the mother of health. Unclean garments, damp and musty dwellings undermine the health of the body. The taste for decent dress and comfortable abodes is peculiar to the Jewish race, and this inclination and taste is not the product of their lately improved social position, nor the result of modern culture. It was a characteristic trait in the Jewish people even in those dark days when the light of freedom and modern civilization had not begun to dawn. Until recent times the Jews were not allowed to live in the spacious and airy streets of European cities; they were pressed and confined to their narrow and damp prison called the Ghetto, and still it is a remarkable fact that when pestilences raged the victims in the Ghetto were comparatively few. Its inhabitants had their sure preventive. A careful choice in food, cleanliness in dress and dwelling shielded them against an otherwise inevitable destruction. Many a knight, when compelled by his financial embarrassment to enter what he imagined the dark den of the despised and hunted Jew, was greatly surprised to find instead neat and attractive surroundings, betokening domestic peace and happiness. This taste was the consequence of their religious training; the much read and revered Talmud kept it alive in their hearts. Some specimens of its golden rules in this respect, which the Doctor gave, may not be out of place. "Be parsimonious as to eating and drinking and liberal as to thy dwelling. Expend more for thy garments than for thy food. Let thy table be less costly than thou canst afford; thy dress in accordance with thy means; in character keep thy wife and children always above thy means." Worldly comfort, the Doctor continued, depends, according to the Talmud, on the following three subjects:—A wife worthy of love, a neat house and a decent dress. The Talmudical teachers were not original in these views; they followed and expounded the spirit of the Bible. By enforcing the regulation of the text in matters of cleanliness Palestine acquired even the outward appearance of a piece of Occident thrown into the Orient, while the utter neglect of this commandment makes many a street in the capital of a western region (New York for example) look as a piece of Orient thrown over sea to the boundaries of farmost Occident. I wish, said the Doctor, our Health and Street Commissioners would give themselves a little more to the study of this department of the Bible; they would learn therein that their office is a priestly function, and that it is a religious duty which is devolved upon them to make vanish all hotbeds of sickness and to restore occidental cleanliness even to the oriental part of our city. The Doctor then proceeded to show by the intimate connection between the inner and outer man how true the old saying is, "Cleanliness leadeth to purity, and purity to holiness." Clean surroundings in promoting and protecting bodily health exert a great influence on our spiritual welfare. Luxury is not the child of cleanliness; it is in most cases a glowworm glittering in a moor. Morality is a light; the purer the atmosphere the brighter it shines. The Doctor then exhorted his audience to live in the salutary spirit of divine law, to watch over the purity of their houses, to notice and to heal, as faithful priests, every evil in person or surroundings, that their camp may be holy and that the Lord God might dwell among them.

MONMOUTH PARK.

Last Day of the First Summer Meeting.

A Splendid Splurge for the Speediest Horses.

Five Thousand People Palpitating and Perspiring.

THREE GOOD RACES.

Duffy Wins the Steeple Chase; Arizona, the Mile Heats, Best Three in Five, and Survivor, the Monmouth Park Sequel Stakes.

I went to the races yesterday. The races occurred at Long Branch. It was the fifth and last day of the first Summer meeting. I had heard from a very kind friend—in fact an over kind friend—that the second Summer meeting would begin on Tuesday, July 13. Mind me, boys, I don't care particularly about racing; but there is such a thing as being talked into a combination. My friend Hank never misses a race, and on this occasion he was determined that I should not miss the steeple chase. Hank had a large interest in Tammany, a very good six-year-old, and, of course, he imagined that Tammany would win. Still the bravest man will falter, and while we were discussing a couple of tenderloins on the steamboat going down to the Branch I noticed a hesitation in Hank's manner. Hank is very fond of potatoes, but yesterday left the potatoes alone, and very severely. And, to add to Hank's trouble, the negro waiter who was told to bring the mustard amused himself slapping flies on the guard of the boat. The mustard did not come, and by the time we got to the Sandy Hook pier Hank was disgusted with life. A brace of individuals, who had been buying pools on Duffy, came to Hank and told him that there was nothing left for him but to drown himself. Hank seemed a little downcast for a moment and his eyes were somewhat bilious. Still he mastered his temper and asked the pool buyers to take a drink. The two pool buyers, who knew the barkeeper, took brandy and soda. The drinks cost $2 25. Hank said that he thought it was a little "steep," but he would try and stand it. When we got on the cars at Sandy Hook there was very little room and no comfort. A small sized Italian had come in with a violin. He screamed a song, the refrain of which was "Viva la Italia—Viva la Francia—Viva Vittorio Emmanuele—Viva Garibaldi." The lad got a number of five cent pieces and Hank gave him a quarter of a dollar to stop. At Seabright, a small watering place on the road, a man with a red face got out and jumped into a wayside inn, and, looking very nervously at the other passengers as he went out, came back with a warm bottle of Philadelphia ale. When he came back he was received with cheers, and one man who had been drinking cried out, "Give him a show! Here's the Shah of Persh-ee!" There was great expectation among the passengers at the sight of the bottle of ale, but the red-faced man lifted it to his mouth and drank it with a sigh—Alexander-like, as if there were no more bottles of ale to conquer.

The breeze was beautiful, and the sun was as good a sun as ever hung over the Bay of Naples.

At the track the first man met was the lemonade merchant. He was gently reclining against the barrel from which he draws his acidulous fluid. On being asked if he had perspired much lately, he remarked briefly:—

"I see the boys have been going and giving me a shot. Well, I'm a-sweating now, and I don't take no ice either."

The grand stand was never better filled than yesterday. Hank, on getting to the course made an effort to see the jockey of the horse which he had bet his money on. Three Paris Mutual men got hold of him and told him that he was acting foolishly. He was betting on the wrong horse, they said. Hank demurred, but they suggested forty cent brandy. Then they kindly introduced him to Governor Henry A. Wise, Daniel Webster, Wade Hampton and Marshal MacMahon. It is needless to say that none of the illustrious men mentioned were present. Those who officiated in their absence were dummies. I had left Hank for a few moments and he was lost to me in the crowd of well dressed women and noisy men on the Grand Stand. Presently he came back and asked me if I knew the illustrious gentlemen to whom he had been introduced. I said "I never saw them before." "Well," he said, "I don't know nothing about it; but Marshal MacMahon just borrowed $5 from me and told me to meet him at the Tuilleries. I guess that $5 is knocked in the head."

The steeple chase was started at this moment, and Hank stood up on the front bench to see what Tammany was going to do. By some strange mischance Tammany came third in the race, and I saw Hank descending the stairs at the back of the house slowly and with grief in his features. The Paris Mutuals, all very quiet men, who have introduced so many illustrious statesmen to Hank, seemed in good spirits and were laughing at the fun. Hank said to me, "I'm going to get a pickled tongue; I feel sick; I think it will do me good."

Just then a very pretty girl in a purple silk dress and with a clear white skin and dark hair walked up to Hank and told him that her name was Ellen. She said, "I sympathize with you and I am very sorry for your loss." And then she began to cry. But Hank had a slight tremor in his throat and said to me, "I wonder if that girl is a niece of Marshal MacMahon. She looks like him. I guess I have bet all the money I'm going to bet to-day." Then the saddling bell rang again and race followed race, and Hank went home a sadder but a wiser man than when he started out.

THE RACING.

The racing yesterday at Long Branch was excellent. The track was in capital condition, and the weather delicious. There was a fine attendance, and everything passed off pleasantly. Three racing events were on the card, the first being a steeple chase, the second mile heats, best three in five and the third a dash of two miles for three-year-olds.

The course for the Long Branch steeple chase handicap, for all ages, was about three miles, over a fair hunting course, and the race was for a purse of $700, $550 of which was to go to the first, $100 to the second and $50 to the third horse. There were three entries, comprising D. J. Bannatyne's brown gelding Duffy, by Hunter's Lexington, dam Olio, aged, carrying 154 pounds; Joseph Donahue's chestnut gelding George West, by Asteroid, dam Kate Hays, four years old, 144 pounds, and Jo. Donahue's chestnut gelding Tammany, by Lexington, dam Lis Mardis, six years old, 151 pounds. Duffy had the call in the betting at slight odds over the other two. He won the race in gallant style. Tammany stumbled and threw his rider before the race was half over, and, it was said, broke down at that time. He, however, followed Duffy and George West throughout the race, taking all the jumps as nicely as any of the others, and, when the race was over, he walked back to the judge's stand as if to learn the decision of the gentleman.

The second race was a very exciting one, as it was for mile heats, best three in five. There were four starters. These were A. C. Franklin's bay mare Arizona, by Lexington, dam Zone, five years old; J. W. Hunt Reynolds' bay colt Whisper, by Planet, dam Mattie Gross, three years old; H. P. McGrath's bay filly Jury, by Lexington, dam Roxanna, four years old, and John Coffee's gray colt by Lightning, dam Jassamine Porter. Jury was the favorite, Arizona being second choice, Coffee's colt and Whisper selling for about equal amounts, far less than the others. Whisper won the first heat apparently quite easily, but this did not change the betting. He won the second heat also, and then he was the favorite over the field at two to one. Arizona came to the front on the third heat, and then Jury and Coffee's colt were sent to their stables. Arizona had taken the pith out of Whisper on the third heat, and she beat him easily the two subsequent ones. Best three in five heats are seldom won by three-year-olds when good and older horses are in the race.

The last event of the day was the Monmouth Sequel Stakes, valued at $800, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for three-year-olds, the winner of the Jersey Derby Stakes to carry five pounds extra; the second horse to receive $200 and the third horse $100 out of the stakes; two miles. For this event there were fourteen entries, five of which came to the post. These were John F. Chamberlin's bay colt Survivor, by Vandal, dam by Lexington; Ransom & Babcock's bay colt Ransom, by Asteroid, dam Banner; H. P. McGrath's brown colt Artist, by Asteroid, dam Fairy; J. W. Weldon's chestnut colt Warlike, by War Dance, dam by Captain Beard; August Belmont's chestnut colt Periwinkle, by Kentucky, dam Fleur des Champs; J. F. Chamberlin's bay filly Mary Constant, by War Dance, dam Lass of Sidney, and D. J. Crouse's chestnut filly Satire, by Revolver, dam Syren. Chamberlin's entries were the favorites, Crouse's filly being second in demand, Artist third, Ransom fourth, Belmont and Weldon selling for the lowest prices. The race was a very lively one. Mary Constant was sent off to make the running for Survivor; Satire followed until she ran herself down, which was about the time that Mary Constant quit. Then Survivor went to the front, and won a capital race in good time for a three-year-old, with 110 pounds up.

The following are the details:—

The First Race.

LONG BRANCH STEEPLE CHASE, a handicap for all ages; about three miles, over a fair hunting course; purse $700—$550 to first, $100 to the second and $50 to third horse.

THE RACE.

The horses galloped away from the starter at a very slow pace, and when they came to the wall in the field, in front of the Club House, Tammany led six lengths, Duffy second, six lengths in advance of George West. Tammany then made the pace sharp across the field towards the quarter pole, leading over the fence by twelve lengths, Duffy second, six lengths ahead of George West. When the horses reached the fence in the field on the far side of the track Duffy had overtaken Tammany, and jumped over the fence on even terms with him, ten lengths in advance of George West. They then ran to a sod wall, near the stables, Duffy going to the front and leading down the hill and up and across the track into the field, Tammany six lengths in front of George West. They ran without changing places over the fence and jumped two sod walls in the field and then ran up in front of the grand stand and leaped over the hedge and water, Duffy leading four lengths, Tammany second, eight lengths in advance of West. Duffy then ran to the stone wall and passed over it six lengths in advance of Tammany, who was twelve lengths in front of West. There was about the same distance between the horses at the fences and the walls until they came to the sod wall in the north field, when Tammany stumbled and threw his rider heavily. Then Gaffney, who was at this time a dozen lengths behind on George West, saw the necessity of going after Duffy in a hurry, and this he did with a rush. As Duffy passed over the water in front of the stand, Tammany followed him riderless, George West ten lengths behind. George was then running very fast, while Duffy was taking things easy. At the sod wall in front of the club house Duffy led half a dozen lengths, but at the fence near the quarter pole George West was close to him, and there was no daylight between them as they ran to the hurdle at the half-mile pole. Duffy gained a length by the jump, but George West lapped him again on the lower turn. The latter, however, could not keep up the brush and was beaten as he turned into the homestretch. Duffy jumped the last hurdle three lengths in front of West, and coming on won the race by four lengths. Tammany followed the other horses to the end of the race, making all the leaps without a rider, and came back to the stand after the race was over. It was reported that he had broken down in the race. The time of the run was 7:27.

After the first heat Jury was still the favorite.

After the second heat Whisper had the call at 2 to 1; but after that Arizona was the favorite at dollars to cents.

THE RACE.

First Heat.—Whisper was first away, Jury second, Arizona third, Coffee fourth. Going round the upper turn Jury and Whisper ran side and side, four lengths in front of Arizona, the latter being three lengths ahead of Coffee. The race was close between Jury and Whisper, the latter showing in front a head at the half-mile pole, Jury second, two lengths in front of Arizona, who was four lengths ahead of Coffee. Whisper ran to the front on the lower turn and swung into the homestretch about a length ahead of Jury, who was a length in front of Arizona, the latter three lengths clear of Coffee. A steady run up the stretch landed Whisper a winner by four lengths, Jury second, three lengths ahead of Arizona, who was one length in advance of Coffee. Time of the heat, 1:46.

Second Heat.—Whisper got away even with Arizona, Coffee following, Jury bringing up the rear. Going around the turn Whisper led half a length, Arizona second, three lengths in advance of Coffee, who was half a length ahead of Jury. There was no change of place down the backstretch until near the half-mile pole, when Jury moved up to third place. As they passed the pole Whisper was half a length in front, but seemed to be laboring, Arizona second, three lengths ahead of Jury, who was two lengths in advance of Coffee's colt. Whisper maintained the lead into the homestretch. Jury hurried him home, driving him in a winner by a neck, Jury second, ten lengths ahead of Arizona, who was one length in advance of Coffee's colt. Time, 1:48¾.

Third Heat.—Coffee's colt went off this time with a bulge, and Hughes, his jockey, ran very foul all around the upper turn; Jury second. These two compelled Whisper, who had the pole, to pull out and run around them. Coffee's colt led half a length at the quarter pole, Whisper second, one length in advance of Jury, who was four lengths in front of Arizona, the latter trailing and biding her time. At the half-mile pole Coffee's colt led a neck, Whisper second, half a length ahead of Jury, who was half a length in advance of Arizona, the latter now making her first effort for the race. Whisper showed in front at the quarter pole by a neck, but from that moment he began to quit and Arizona soon took his place. She came up the homestretch gallantly, winning the heat by two lengths, Coffee's colt second, two lengths ahead of Jury, who was two lengths in front of Whisper. Coffee's colt was distanced and his rider suspended for foul riding the remainder of the meeting. Time of the heat, 1:47¾.

Fourth Heat.—Arizona took the lead with the tap of the drum, and she never relinquished it to the end. She was half a length in front at the quarter pole, about the same distance ahead at the half, and she never drew away from the colt until well up the homestretch. She won by a length, making the heat in 1:53¼.

Fifth Heat.—This heat was a counterpart of the previous one. Arizona took the lead and held it under a pull to the end. She won by a length and a half in 1:55.

THE RACE.

The horses had a very good send-off, Survivor showing in front, Periwinkle second, Warlike third, Mary Constant fourth, Satire fifth, Ransom sixth, Artist seventh. Mary Constant immediately made a dash to the front, and going at the top of her speed led fifteen lengths to the quarter pole, Survivor second, two lengths in front of Periwinkle, who was two lengths more in advance of Warlike, Satire fifth, Ransom sixth, Artist seventh. Going down the backstretch Mary kept up her rapid run and was twenty lengths away from the others at the half-mile pole. This dodge on the part of the jockey of Mary Constant had the effect of bringing Satire out to chase her, which was at once discovered to be Satire's downfall. Mary Constant was making the running for Survivor, and a better trap was never sprung than this one. Satire was the only horse in the race that Mr. Chamberlain's trainer expressed himself in fear of; in fact we heard him say so to Mr. Chamberlain. Satire was four lengths ahead of Survivor at the half-mile pole, the latter being a neck in front of Periwinkle, the latter about the same distance ahead of Artist, Warlike sixth, Ransom seventh. It was laughable to see Mary Constant run, with Satire following her around the lower turn. Mary was fifteen lengths ahead of Satire at the three-quarter pole, the latter ten lengths ahead of Artist, who had taken third place, Survivor fourth, Periwinkle fifth, Warlike sixth, Ransom seventh. As the horses came up and passed under the string at the end of the first mile Mary Constant still had twenty lengths, Satire second, ten lengths in front of Survivor, who was half a length in advance of Warlike, the latter a neck ahead of Artist, who had Periwinkle lapped on him, Ransom seventh. Mary Constant began to shorten her stride on the upper turn, and was only twelve lengths in front of Satire at the quarter pole, the latter being six lengths ahead of Survivor and the others, who were now closing rapidly on them. Going down the backstretch Mary Constant and Satire both shot their bolts, and were pumped out. They seemed to be waiting at the half-mile pole for some of the others to take their places. At that point Mary Constant led but three lengths, Satire second, one length in front of Survivor, who was half a length ahead of Periwinkle, the latter a neck and shoulders in advance of Warlike, Ransom sixth, Artist seventh. The horses were so close together on the lower turn that it was almost impossible to say which was in front at times; but just as they passed the three-quarter pole Survivor came to the front with a rush and led two lengths into the homestretch. He came on like a good race horse, as he is, and won the race by eight lengths, Ransom second, one length in front of Artist, who was four lengths ahead of Warlike, the latter being two lengths in advance of Periwinkle, Mary Constant sixth, Satire seventh. Time of the two miles, 3:47¾.

DEERFOOT PARK.

Tom the Winner of the Postponed 2:50 Purse.

A small party of interested turfmen—those in the pool-box and friends of the drivers—assembled at Deerfoot Park yesterday afternoon to witness the result of the purse of $75 for horses that never beat 2:50, left unfinished on Friday because of darkness, after five heats had been trotted. At that time Jno. V. Carroll's sorrel gelding Tom and A. L. Rogers' black gelding Eastern Star had two heats each to their credit, and Mr. Thoms' bay gelding Magic one heat.

Among the few spectators it was "dollars to cents" that Tom would prove the winner, and such was the case, yet two additional heats were trotted before the contest was decided. Eastern Star threw a shoe when coming for the word on the sixth heat and this mishap caused her to be distanced. Magic won the heat, but it was quite as much as the driver of Tom could do to keep him back and not beat the bay gelding. Tom won the seventh heat and the race. The following is a complete

THE NATIONAL GAME.

The Mutuals and Atlantics played a fine game of ball on the Union Grounds yesterday afternoon in the presence of about three thousand spectators. The fielding was sharp on both sides, but the New Yorkers outbatted the Brooklyn boys. Hatfield, Gedney and Holdsworth each distinguished himself for the Mutuals, as did also Ferguson and Burdock for the Atlantics.

The Kelly benefit game, between the Atlantic and Mutual clubs, will be played on the Union Grounds, Williamsburg, next Saturday afternoon, the 19th inst. Play will be "called" at a quarter to four o'clock.

The Atlantics play the Athletics on the Union Grounds to-morrow, and the Mutuals play the Bostons the next day on the same grounds.

THE ARCTIC SEARCH.

The Tigress in Commission—Delay in the Departure of the Polaris Rescue Ship from the Navy Yard—Another Leak Discovered.

The Tigress, Arctic search steamer, was formally put in commission yesterday morning at the Navy Yard, and to-day floats the flag of the Great Republic from her peak. It was just two weeks last evening since she arrived in this harbor, under the British flag, from St. John's, a dirty, begrimed, tough and greasy looking little sealer, and to-day she is in a fair way of looking like a trim little navy vessel, and being at sea ere many days more a "taut" American explorer.

The ceremony of putting the ship in commission was a mere routine, but it is an unusual thing for the chief of the Navy Department to participate in it as in this instance. All the commissioned officers of the vessel—Commander Greer, Lieutenant Commander White and Lieutenants Barry, Sebree and Wilkins—were mustered on the poopdeck, and with them Admiral Rowan, Commandant of the Navy Yard, and Secretary Robeson. In a few formal words Secretary Robeson addressed Commander Greer, informing him that the vessel was now fully commissioned and placed in his charge, and expressing the hope that her mission would prove a successful one. For the first time in the vessel's now remarkable history was run up to her peak and floated free in the sunshine, and at the same moment the navy penant was spun aloft on the halyards and broke from the mizzen top, and the vessel had changed allegiance and became a republican government steamer, officered by men of war, instead of being a dirty, oily seal hunter in the merchant service of a monarchy. During the day the officers' personal baggage was conveyed on board and a few light stores were put in. About two o'clock her blue-jacketed crew of "Yankee (?) tars" came aboard, with their "dream bags" full of "duds," and began stowing away themselves and

THEIR LITTLE "KITS."

About three o'clock a few faint wreaths of discolored smoke filtering away from her smokestack told that she was getting her fires up preparatory to her voyage down the bay, and the people on the wharf began to look somewhat wistfully at the ship about to start on a voyage so fraught with humane interest, tinged even with a shade of romance that was pathetic and may yet prove mysteriously tragic.

Commander Greer informed the HERALD reporter that he expected to cast off the vessel's lines about five o'clock to proceed down the bay to the compass station, where the ship's compasses are to be adjusted. But there seemed to be a hitch somewhere, and, as the facts eventually showed, there was. One of the foreman ship carpenters who has been at work on the Tigress informed the reporter that the vessel has been leaking since she left the Dry Dock, and that all the efforts of Mr. Hanscom and the men under him had been unavailing to find the exact location of the leak till at about three o'clock yesterday, when it was discovered by Mr. Mintoyne, the Assistant Naval Constructor, who while examining her between her ribs and inside planking found the leak and with great difficulty temporarily plugged it. It is said that an augur hole had been left unplugged under the outside planking and had not been calked, thus causing the leak.

Shortly after the discovery Mr. Mintoyne called on the executive officer of the yard and reported the discovery and that a temporary plugging had been placed over the spot. The authorities at the yard have been trying to keep the affair a secret, not wishing it to get circulation, and there is little doubt that, owing to the hurry of the repairs on the vessel, strict attention has not been given to the work done on her.

The Tigress left the Brooklyn Navy Yard last evening, although at a later hour than first reported.

THE COLLEGES REGATTA.

A Placid River, with the Rowers in Active Muscle and High Glee.

Stirring Scenes on the Banks of the Stream—The Oarsman's Science in Every Style—Critique and Physique—Harvard, Cambridge, Cornell, Ya'e Men and the Rest—The Lumbermen from Maine—The "Pets" of the Betters—John Wesley and Martin Luther—The Champion Flags—Telegraphic Enterprise—Side Sports and Enjoyments.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., July 12, 1873.

The river yesterday and to-day has been as smooth almost as a mirror. The water, owing to rains at the north, has risen several inches, and the college boatmen are in corresponding high feather and happy as clams at high water. Nearly all were out this morning taking their morning pull, and an excellent opportunity was offered to the numerous spectators, who here and there dotted the banks, to witness their several styles of rowing, comment thereon and calculate their probable chances. From nine until after eleven, the usual hours of practice, the river road was filled with gay equipages, and among the occupants and most earnest watchers of the various crews was a large sprinkling of the fairer sex, who, with diminutive watches in dainty hands, were as assiduous in telling off the number of strokes of this and that crew as the most veteran oarsman or professional trainer. Gold and ivory tipped opera and ornamental field glasses were brought to bear upon the muscular and well displayed proportions of the rival oarsmen by the fair damsels with as much interest as though they were studying out the style of some rival's dress at the opera, accompanied by the most tender and interesting criticisms. Just now the Aggies' boat swept by, impelled by the sturdy Massachusetts farmers, when a sweet sixteen at my left exclaimed, "Oh, what a splendid looking fellow that stroke is! See how his muscles stand out, and how hard he is pulling! I know they will win."

Next comes the Harvards, their backs and oars in perfect unison, and their well tanned forms broad shoulders and straining muscles outlined sharply in the clear and brilliant sunlight. Just ahead of me, in an elegant phaeton, are two charming damsels and companion, whose opera glasses have borne steadily down in silence upon the Cambridge crew ever since they hove in sight. As they pass by I overhear the delicate sentiment, "Oh, Fanny, see that young fellow in the centre of the Harvards! What a delicate mustache he has! He must be elegant." One after another the crews go by, and while the crowd of fair ones are making their personal criticisms your correspondent has seized the opportunity to jot down a few observations regarding the style and appearance of the several crews.

THE MORE ATTRACTIVE ATHLETES.

As I wrote you yesterday, the three best looking crews, so far as style of rowing is concerned, are the Harvard, Cornell and Yale—though a qualifying distinction should be made in regard to the latter that they do not as yet succeed perfectly in getting the English stroke. Their recover is unnecessarily slow, the oars being much longer in the air than in the water, with a bad hang at the beginning and a partial failure to get the catch. So nearly do the Cornell and Harvard crews row alike, however, that one unacquainted with the men personally would find it almost impossible to distinguish between them as they go by.

One of the toughest looking crews on the course is the Bowdoins, or "lumbermen from Maine," as they are termed. They are, with two exceptions, the same crew which rowed last year, and have evidently lost nothing by the year's experience. Any one who has ever been so fortunate as to see the famous St. Johns crew of Fulton Price can at once picture out the style of this stalwart crew from the Pine Tree State, so closely have they followed the instructions of their trainer, Price. They are the only crew here that do not slide, Price, their trainer, believing that any such movement is a waste of time and muscle, and that all the extra power from the use of the legs thus obtained may be employed as well and easier if the oarsman is true to himself and takes his brace in the beginning of the stroke fairly from the stretcher. The crew reach well forward, and put all their power into the first part of the stroke, finishing it before the body reaches the perpendicular. Their regular pace is about forty strokes to the minute, and in spurting they are able to increase it to forty-two or forty-three.

Not less powerful in appearance than the Bowdoins, and very similar in point of personal physique, are the Aggies, whom Josh Ward has under his watchful care and keeping. Their style of rowing is naturally much like that of the Ward brothers, though lacking the skill which years of experience and practice have given that famous crew. Eldred, the stroke, and Benedict, who pulls in the waist, are the main stay of the crew, and, with Simpson the bow, were together in the winning boat at Engleside two years ago. They have just received a beautiful white pine shell from George Roahr, which, however, is unfortunately a trifle too light for this powerful crew. In still water she may answer, but should it be rough or choppy they will stand a good chance of sending her to the bottom of the river instead of across the home line.

The Columbia crew have already been described at full length in the HERALD, but have, since the arrival of their new boat, made marked improvement in their style. They only lack, as Hank Ward, their trainer, expresses it, a few more years to make them one of the most formidable crews on the river. They receive the credit on all sides of sending their boat ahead remarkably fast and of doing all that could be expected of any crew of their age. Barring accident, they will by no means come in last, and Hank asserts confidently that he can name five crews that will be behind them at the finish.

THE WILLIAMS CREW,

with the Cornell, Aggies and Bowdoins, make up the four stockiest looking crews here. The Dartmouth giants, as they are termed, are taller and heavier, but these have a thick set and stouter and more enduring look. Their stroke, Gunster, pulls an almost perfect oar, equalling in style and finish that of the best man in the Harvard boat. The crew are hardly up to their stroke, however, but pull very evenly and with much power. They reach well forward, get their oars well into the water, and pull them steadily through, finishing, however, rather too soon, and, with the exception of the stroke, before the body reaches the perpendicular. Their pace is about thirty-eight strokes per minute.

THE PETS OF THE BETTING CIRCLES, until within a day or two, have been the Dartmouth giants, who, under the tutelage of John Biglin, are expected to perform wonders. This crew have done an enormous pile of work, walking some days eighteen or twenty miles and rowing three times besides. Their style of stroke is best described as being no style at all. In the language of Biglin, "they row just like any other crew," but this expression probably arises from the fact that John is terribly down on "style" or "scientific strokes," believing that everybody rows alike all the world over. To the careful observer they appear as though they were not half using their power. They reach clear forward, which is no small distance in the case of these six-footers, and then each one seems at a loss what to do. Finally, the oars are put in and then there is a tremendous pull, which, while it lasts, sends the boat ahead with great force.

DARTMOUTH UNDER THE WEATHER.

Unfortunately they have been in bad shape for the past two days, and have been forced to omit their regular pull. The principal trouble has been from boils and general indisposition; but Gater, one of the most powerful men in the boat, has been seriously threatened with a fever, and is hardly out of danger yet, although he and all the rest are on the mend; and John Biglin remarked to a bystander yesterday that the boys were all right, and evidently was well pleased to see his crew depreciated in order that they might sell down in the pools, as his Amherst crew did last year. It may be a characteristic game of John's, but, if so, has been pretty finely played; for the opinion is becoming very general that the crew are overtrained. Biglin certainly was never in a more savage humor than he has been this year—probably the effects of his own training for the race with Ward—and the remorseless way in which he has forced the work on his crew would certainly demoralize any set of men less strong and hardy than the "giants" who are under his charge.

But Biglin seldom trains a losing crew, and those who are inside the ring say that John knows what his crew can stand and what they cannot, and that they will be in as good condition on the day of the race as the Amherst men were last year. About the cleanest built crew here is the winners of last year. Not an ounce of spare flesh is observable on them anywhere, and they give every appearance of having been in careful training for many weeks, while their corded muscles, hard as flint, tell of the hard work they did in the gymnasium last Winter and on the river this Spring. They are lighter than the crew last year, but to all appearance none the less strong. Their style of rowing, while hardly up to Harvard or Cornell, has a dash and spirit to it that is very effective. It is one of the quickest strokes on the river, the regular pace being forty and forty-one strokes per minute, which, in spurting, they often increase to forty-four. They do not reach so far forward as some of the others, but go further back. Their oars are got in in good time, and with a near approach to the catch. Every man in the boat is a hard puller, and the crew that beats them will have to make, in the opinion of many, the winning time.

The Freshmen are also a stout looking set of men, though hardly up to the crew of last year. They keep well together, reach further forward than the University, and keep very good time. Their regular stroke is about thirty-eight per minute.

WESLEYAN AND TRINITY.

To attempt an accurate description of the style of the Wesleyan crew is to attempt to describe something that does not exist. They are a very muscular set, but they have no style. The only possible description of their manner of rowing is to say that they get well forward in a rapid, shambling sort of a way; put their oars into the water very well together, and then every man yanks at the oar with all his might in the manner that best suits himself. The result is that the boat fairly lifts from the water at each stroke and gets along at a remarkably rapid rate with a continuous succession of jumps. As Ginzer, their trainer, expresses it, they believe that the whole science of rowing is to start together and pull.

Last in the list, and according to many minds last in the race, comes the Trinity crew, who pull slower even than the Yale and by odds the laziest stroke upon the river. They reach very far forward, set their oars slowly and carefully into the water, and then seem to wait for the impetus of the boat to push the oar to them instead of tugging at it. They do pull the oar way up, however, in first class style, and if they could pull the stroke they have forty-two times a minute instead of thirty-two, would stand a good chance to lead the river. As it is they are accorded the last place, but as Amherst was done the same last year, they may develop an amount of steam that will surprise everybody.

THE CHAMPION FLAGS

have arrived and are to be put on exhibition with the prizes offered by the Citizens' Regatta Committee. They consist of two sets of elegant silk banners—one for each winning crew in the University and Freshman races—and are very nice. One of the flags in each set is a plain American ensign, on the six white bars of which the names of the winning crew are to be inscribed after the race. The other is a more ornamental blue silk banner, bearing on one side the inscription, "Third Inter-Collegiate Regatta, Connecticut River, Springfield, Mass.," with the words "University (or Freshman) champion" underneath, and the date, "Thursday, July 17," below. The reverse is left blank, but, according to the direction of the Executive Committee, is to be filled out, after the race, with a list of the crews, arranged in the order in which they shall be adjudged to have crossed the line. In each corner are the letters R. A. A. C., initials of the rowing association which this year, for the first time, presents the champion flags. Before the association was formed the crews furnished the colors themselves, paying for them pro rata. For the past two years the citizens have furnished them, but at the last meeting of the association it was decided that the sign of the championship in the association ought to be presented by the association itself, and the Executive Committee were authorized to appoint a sub-flag committee to procure them. Mr. Underhill, of Trinity, was chairman of this committee, but, at his request, Captain Phillips, chairman of the Citizens' Committee, has attended to the business of their manufacture. The cost of each set is limited by the association to $60, and this includes the lettering that cannot be done until after the race.

In the eyes of the college oarsmen, however, their value is not measured by money, and they will be considered a generous equivalent for six months of hard labor and six or ten weeks of rigid self-denial.

THE HARVARD TELEGRAPHIC ENTERPRISE.

If there is any one thing that Harvard men delight in it is to originate some new enterprise that shall get the names of themselves and their college into print; and it was doubtless something of this spirit that first put the idea of a regatta telegraph into the heads of the Harvard Telegraph Company. The first plan was to run a wire along the east side of the river, using the poles of the Western Union Company along the line of the Southern Railroad. A change in the plan was necessitated by the announcement that the grand stand was to be placed on the other side, and so the collegians, with a commendable spirit of enterprise, decided to put up poles and run the wire on that side, doing the work themselves. A delegation of the company are now in this city and have commenced to map out their work. Another change may be decided on, however, now that a grand stand is to be built on this side of the river, accessible to the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. Strong exertions are making to arouse the railroad to the needs of the situation and to prove to them what everybody else knows, that extra trains to the Longmeadow station will reap a golden harvest for the company, besides accommodating the thousands who will be here next week, and must have some means of getting to the races. If such an arrangement shall be made, the telegraph line will probably be placed on this side, as was at first intended.

The plan of the Harvard men is to have half-mile stations along the course, and telegraph the positions of the boats as they pass each station, together with such additional information as the operators may have time to note. These data are to be taken off on blanks prepared for the purpose and copies of these will be furnished to the press in the evening at the headquarters of the Regatta Committee, at Haynes' Hotel. The great trouble will be in the liability that some of the inexperienced student operators who are to manage the line will make serious mistakes in the excitement of the moment, but, if the idea can be successfully carried out, it will be of great value in getting an accurate report of the race.

THE FRESHMAN BALL TOURNAMENT A FIZZLE.

The management of the base ball tournament was evidently characteristic of Freshmen, and has dwindled from the magnificent proportions it assumed at first, and, notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions of the local press to give it a name and awaken enthusiasm, has resulted at last in a plain match on Thursday morning between the Freshman nines of Brown and Harvard. These nines are very evenly matched and the game will be well worth witnessing; but it can scarcely be dignified with the name of a tournament. Several causes have led to bring about this fizzle. At the convention held in this city in June, representatives were present from the Freshman classes of Amherst, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Harvard, Trinity, Williams and Yale, and so much talking and arranging was done that it seemed as though a tournament was certain to take place between the class nines of all three colleges; and when, a week after, Brown and Wesleyan signified a desire to enter the lists, the only fear was that the week would not be long enough for the Freshman ballists to do all they had mapped out. One by one, however, the crews sent in their regrets, until now only two remain. The Amherst men were the first to change their minds, and this decision was brought about by the woeful manner in which their Freshmen were defeated by all the class and local country nines. Bowdoin was too far away to come, and Dartmouth had invested too much in John Biglin to have anything left for things of minor importance. Williams had intended to participate up to the first of this week, when, hearing that everybody had backed out but Harvard, they also disbanded and went home. The lovers of base ball, however, are not to be deprived of their fun, but will have a chance to delight themselves in a

MATCH BETWEEN THE BOSTONS AND ATHLETICS,

which has been arranged to take place on Hampden Park, Wednesday afternoon. A movement is also on foot to have the single scull race between the college oarsmen come off after the match, on the course opposite the Park, thereby accommodating the attending public, and the University oarsmen who want to compete for the prize cup, but who will not row two races in one day.

INTERESTING TO BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

A case, the decision in which will be of interest to the members of benevolent societies generally, came up for trial before Justice McGuire, in the Seventh District Civil Court, on Thursday last. William Keating, it was shown, became a member of the Quarrymen's Society, No. 2, about six years ago, and from that time till January last he paid his dues regularly. Two years ago he lost the use of his sight by the premature explosion of a blast. According to the rules of the society this accident entitled him to $4 every alternate week. The Society refused to give it, hence the suit by Keating against the officers to recover the sum of $105, which is now owing to him. The defendants testified that the plaintiff was expelled from the organization in January last, but admitted that there had been no charges preferred against him. The President also admitted during the examination that the members of his Society were working under the rules and regulations of the Quarrymen's Protective Society, No. 1, according to which the plaintiff was entitled to benefits. Justice McGuire reserved his decision.

Nathan Nesbitt for the plaintiff and ex-Alderman Hardy for the defendants.

THE HARLEM CHURCH WAR.

The arrest of Mr. W. G. Esterbrook, on a charge of assault and battery, growing out of an alleged disturbance of a business meeting of members of the First Baptist church of Harlem, held on July 8, at Market Hall, is likely to widen the breach between the rival factions of that divided congregation. The complainant, Mr. C. Wesley Tunel, having declined to press the charge, Judge McQuade has dismissed the complaint. Mr. Esterbrook, dissatisfied with this disposition of the case, will, it is said, bring an action for false imprisonment against his accuser, and his example, it is alleged, will be followed by the other gentlemen arrested at the same time, charged with disturbing a religious meeting.

CRUISING IN THE SOUND.

The Annual Cruises of the New York, Brooklyn and Atlantic Yacht Clubs.

A BRILLIANT PROSPECT FOR THE SEASON.

The Programme of the Brooklyn Yacht Club Cruise.

The season is now approaching when the yachtsmen take their annual vacation, leaving the cares of business for two or three weeks to revel in the fresh air and cool breezes of the Sound. There is not, perhaps, in the world a more beautiful cruising ground than is found in Long Island Sound. A magnificent expanse of water, nearly landlocked and surrounded with harbors, inlets and beautifully wooded lands, cannot fail to be appreciated by the yachtsman who for many dreary months has been tied to the counting house, with no fresher landscape to soothe the eye than the glaring streets of the city. There can be nothing more exhilarating than a cruise up the Sound after six months' close attention to business. The fresh breeze, the fleet yacht dashing through the water, tossing the spray from her bows, and the relief from the noise and turmoil of the city—all tend to make one forget the cares of life, and for a while give way entirely to the enchantment of the scene.

THE ANNUAL CRUISES

of the three larger yacht clubs will not interfere with one another this year, as the dates have been so fixed as not to clash. The Brooklyn Yacht Club have decided to rendezvous for their cruise at Glen Cove on Friday, July 18. The cruise of the Atlantic Yacht Club commences on the 2d of August, and that of the New York Yacht Club on or about the 10th of August.

THE BROOKLYN YACHT CLUB

at a recent meeting arranged their programme and intend having a very pleasant time. Commodore Jacob Voorhis, Jr., in the flagship Madeleine, will take command of the fleet, embracing the schooner yachts Fleur de Lis, Magic, Foam, Alice, Tarolinta and some twenty sloops. In relation to the cruise Commodore Voorhis has issued the following orders:—

GENERAL ORDER NO. 1, 1873.
FLAGSHIP MADELEINE, NEW YORK HARBOR, July.
Annual Cruise—Brooklyn Yacht Club.

1. The fleet will rendezvous at Glen Cove on Friday afternoon, July 18. N. B.—Steamboat will leave Peck slip, East River, at four P. M.
2. SATURDAY, July 19.—On signal from the flagship the fleet will get under way for Morris Cove, New Haven harbor.
3. SUNDAY, July 20.—Divine service at half-past ten o'clock A. M.
4. MONDAY, July 21.—At eight o'clock A. M. the fleet will get under way and proceed to West Haven, where the Club will receive a grand reception and partake of a Rhode Island clam bake, tendered to them by the proprietor of the Beach House.
5. TUESDAY, July 22.—The fleet will get under way for New London, and upon arrival yachts will come to anchor off Pequot House.
6. WEDNESDAY, July 23.—A regatta will take place for all sloops around Lightship and North Hammock for prizes given by the Club; also suitable entertainments under direction of Committee on Amusements.
7. THURSDAY, July 24.—The fleet will get under way for Stonington, where in the evening a reception and social entertainment will be given the Club.
8. FRIDAY, July 25.—The fleet will get under way for Newport, and upon arrival will anchor as near together as possible.
9. SATURDAY, July 26.—At six A. M. fleet will get under way for Rocky Point and return to Newport the same evening.
10. SUNDAY, July 27.—The fleet will remain in Newport harbor.
11. MONDAY, July 28.—A grand regatta for schooners and first class sloops, from Brenton's Reef Lightship around Block Island Buoy and return.
12. TUESDAY, July 29.—On signal fleet will get under way for Martha's Vineyard and will come to anchor in Vineyard Haven.
13. WEDNESDAY, July 30.—Weather permitting, the fleet will proceed to Oak Bluff and visit the camp ground during the day.
14. THURSDAY, July 31.—On signal the fleet will get under way for New Bedford.
15. Each yacht will provide blue lights and rockets to be used in night sailing for signalizing.

In going into harbor headmost yachts will lay to so that the fleet may proceed into port as near together as possible.

Further orders will be issued from time to time by the Commodore, as circumstances may require, and meeting for advice and consultation of owners of yachts will be held on due signal from the flagship Madeleine.

Yacht owners intending to join the squadron on their annual cruise will please report to W. W. T. Lee, Secretary, at 114 Wall street, on or before the 15th day of July. The committees on cruise, music and amusements will report to the Secretary on or before July 10.

THE ATLANTIC YACHT CLUB

have arranged to start on their annual cruise on the afternoon of August 2 from Glen Cove. They will probably visit Oyster Bay, Greenport, New London, Stonington and Newport, making a brief stay at each port. Commodore Maxwell will take command in the flagship Peerless. The fleet will probably comprise the schooner yachts Resolute, Tidal Wave, Foam, Triton, Mystic, Sea Witch and Ariel and a large fleet of sloops of various dimensions, from the Vision to the little Undine.

THE NEW YORK YACHT CLUB

have not as yet arranged for their cruise, but at the general meeting, set down for next Thursday evening, at the club house, on the corner of Twenty-seventh street and Madison avenue, the programme will be discussed and the date and place of rendezvous appointed. The fleet will probably sail this year under the command of Rear Commodore Kingsland, of the schooner yacht Alarm. The cruise will doubtless embrace a visit to New London, Newport, New Bedford, Martha's Vineyard and perhaps to Boston. There will be a large fleet of yachts, viz.:—The schooner yachts Columbia, Tarolinta, Rambler, Dreadnaught, Resolute, Madeleine, Tidal Wave, Enchantress, Magic, Viking, Phantom, Fleur de Lis, Peerless, Ariel, Clio, Fleetwing, Idler, Palmer and Josephine, and the sloop yachts Vision, Gracie, Kate, Ariadne, West Wind and others.

There are rumors of lively times at Newport, as it is reported several cups are to be presented to the Club, to be sailed for by the schooners and sloops of the fleet.

Yachting Notes.

The following yachts passed Whitestone yesterday:—

Yacht Alarm, N.Y.Y.C., Rear Commodore George L. Kingsland, from New York for Newport.

Yacht Triton, A.Y.C., Mr. Thayer, from New York, cruising eastward.

Yacht Gracie (sloop), N.Y.Y.C., Mr. Walter, from New York for Glen Cove.

RUFFIANLY CONDUCTORS—THE LATEST OUTRAGE ON OUR CITY CARS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

Let me tell you of my experience on a Second avenue car yesterday afternoon, and then I would like your opinion of a corporation that keeps such ruffianly conductors in its service. With my little boy, aged seven, I got on one of the Second avenue cars, the conductor of which wore a badge numbered 69. This conductor received from me a $1 bill, out of which he retained twelve cents fare, charging full price for my little boy. I told him quietly my child was under the required age and demanded the difference. Instead of complying this "gentlemanly" fellow opened a torrent of abuse at me, using language which was both vile and insolent. In the same car were ladies with their children, of about the same age as my boy. I asked them if they had paid full fare and they answered "no." Of course this added to my indignation. I again demanded of the conductor why he discriminated so unjustly—what right he had to charge full fare for my child and only half fare for others? He insolently replied that he did not care what others paid; he had my money and he intended to keep it. This was so manifestly unjust and the fellow's conduct was so outrageously violent that one of the passengers (an old gentleman) interfered in my behalf. The only satisfaction given to the gentleman was an impudent threat to "put him out" if he did not mind his own business, and then a cowardly "back down," when the gentleman firmly informed the valiant conductor that if he laid hands upon him it would be at his peril. Finally the conductor, finding the indignation so hot against him, impudently threw six cents into my lap. I told him I only asked for my honest change—three cents—but he refused, in a scowling manner, to receive any payment for the child, and when, as I was about to leave the car, I laid the three cents that belonged to the railroad company on one of the empty seats, he angrily picked up the money and hurled it after me in the street.

Now, Mr. Editor, is not this a case that demands exposure? I did not go to the Superintendent of the road fearing further insult. But I appeal to you as the protector of all classes. How long will such ruffians as Conductor 69—a fit companion for Foster—be tolerated on our city railways?

I should add that the car was coming up town, and passed the depot about twenty-five minutes past four o'clock yesterday afternoon.

I do not want my name published, but if necessary I will appear against this ruffian.

A LADY OF THE NINETEENTH WARD.

DEATH OF A POLITICIAN.

Coroner Young was yesterday called to 83 King street to hold an inquest over the remains of Thomas Nelligan, a member of the Tammany Hall General Committee, who died from pulmonary disease, with which he had long suffered. Deceased was one of the clerks of the Civil Court held at Jefferson Market, and it is believed by some of the friends that the persistent refusal of Comptroller Green to pay him his salary for nearly a year and a half past had a tendency to hasten his death. Mr. Nelligan has left a widow and children in indigent circumstances.

OUR RUFFIANLY CONDUCTORS.—The letter of "a lady of the Nineteenth ward," published in another column, giving an account of her experience with a ruffianly conductor of the Second Avenue Railroad Company, calls timely attention to a nuisance that sorely needs abatement. The conductors on our cars are proverbially insolent, impolite and ruffianly. Complaints are of daily occurrence, but the railroad managers pay not the slightest heed to the "irregularities" of their subordinates. All they care for is the dimes. Their conductors can do as they like, provided they turn in as many of the dimes as possible. What we would advise the lady of the Nineteenth ward to do is to bring an action for damages against the company for the unjustifiable assault of which she complains. Nothing brings down these corporations so rapidly as an assault on the purse.

THE CONNECTICUT LEGISLATURE adjourned yesterday, and the "land of steady habits" has at last resigned itself to clambakes, surf bathing, mountain climbing, mineral water and the other festivities of the season.

ALL our latest news from Spain confirms the opinion that the country is gradually falling into the wildest state of lawless confusion The defeat of the government troops at Ripoll by the Carlists is confirmed. So, also, is the rising of the Internationals at Alcoy, in Alicante. The Alcoy affair seems to have been characterized by all the worst features of the Paris Commune. Not only was the Mayor killed, but his dead body was dragged through the streets by a yelling mob. A similar fate befell the Collector of Taxes. Several factories were fired and reduced to ashes. At Malaga, too, the wildest kind of atrocities have been committed. The people have risen against the municipality, and such is the helplessness of the authorities that the Mayor of the town in pure despair has tendered his resignation. The government is full of bounce; but of course it can do nothing. A coup d'état of a vigorous and determined kind is the next sensation which we look for in Spain. If Spain cannot save herself it will be the duty of the other Powers to take her in hand. We do not much like holy alliances, but any alliance which would save Spain from self-destruction might be a blessing.

Summer Sundays in New York—The Religious and Other Amusements of the People.

If, good reader, you have just arrived in town, and after leaving your hotel to call upon your friends you have found that the Hon. Slashem Stunner, his good lady and his daughters, Miss Angeline Stunner and Miss Clara Evelina Stunner, are "out of town," be sure that the Summer is in the air. Nothing short of that would ever induce the Hon. Slashem to be two days away from the club, where things political are settled in shady corners. Nothing short of that would rob Miss Angeline of her little informal receptions, her opera box and her dazzling city toilets; nothing short of that would steal the sentimental Clara Evelina from her adoration of the beautiful in pictures, heart-rending society millinery plays, opera tenors, chatelaines, dry goods and that bewitching agglomeration which she names "dear, romantic Gotham." The Rev. Hezekiah Plumpchin, who preached at your village church a year ago, has sailed a week ago for Europe, and even that dapper young fellow, Gervaise Jones, who sang "Ruddier than the Cherry" at the church concert, is away for a month, singing "Redder than the Raspberry" at a parochial festival in some other part of the country, where he charms the rustic maidens with his larynx and his new Summer suit, as he did the maidens of Poppleville last year. These, to be sure, are the negative signs of Summer. On this fair Sabbath morning the signs are everywhere. Not with the few thousands who find the city unsupportable and the watering place hotels cheap have you to do now. The million are abroad now to tell you that the leaves are green, the sun shining and the waters cool. As this is Sunday, you may look into the church of your clerical friend Plumpchin, and it the pews are not nearly so full or the singing so loud-voiced, Summer is seen in the gauzy robes, the light colors, the strange preacher, Mr. Eliseus Pallidman, and his sermon, almost as bloodless as his cheeks. Summer sighs over this part of the picture as its breezes do through the trees. We shall touch this subject further on.

But the multitude—the pent-up million, who see in a Summer Sunday their day of days—just mark them as they enjoy it! Poor, Paterfamalias may say, as he hurries his little ones through the toilet, which is their "best":—

> The turf shall be my fragrant shrine;
> My temple, Lord, that arch of Thine;
> My censer's breath the mountain air,
> And silent thoughts my only prayer.

It is more probable, however, that the good man leaves all that business to the poets and counts the sandwiches by way of thanking Heaven for his daily bread. Whatever his thoughts he is seen betimes heading the family procession towards Staten Island, the delightful; Coney Island, the sandy and surfy; somewhere up the Hudson, somewhere down the Bay, somewhere beyond the Harlem River, or somewhere behind Hunter's Point. That class is thus disposed of—it is among the best. Next we have those who are more particular about their raiment and less anxious for festive enjoyment. They are going to Central Park. The long avenue lines of horse cars are laden with them. They go in groups of flashy young men, whose very cigars have a priggish twist. They go in pairs, whereof a moiety is feminine and of which both integers are young. These are the lovers, and their hours are these, when the afternoon merges into the time of lengthening shadows and the soul is full of soft and pleasant emotions. Old people are there to breathe the fresh air, and very young ones are there to play in a subdued Sabbatarian manner. Ah! it is a goodly sight. The Park is the people's flower garden now, it ever. The Germans, good souls, are there in large number; but their brows are clouded more than is their wont. If you require to know whence comes this darkening of the broad, solid face, mark how light-hearted are the thousands of Vaterland's children who are thronging the ferryboats to Jersey, that they may drink lager in Hudsonian streams from the ferryhouse to the Sybil's Cave and through the length and breadth of the Elysian Fields. Is it good that they should be sent thither by law? Let the man who loves total abstinence by edict and encourages vice in many another form thereby answer. But the poorer, the poorest classes, where is their enjoyment? Blue laws in a city like New York, where "toil remitting gives its turn to play" so seldom, must be as unwise as they are next to impossible to enforce. To the denizens, however, of the crowded tenement houses that darken the sunlight in the narrow streets and alleys of the city in the Fourth and Sixth wards, for example, the Blue law, or the Liquor law, makes very little difference. The men may come out in their shirt sleeves and smoke their pipes on the stoops, while their wives cook the Sunday dinner, and the children, whom every effort has been made to dress presentably, are rolling over each other on the sidewalk. It is a day of rest in truth, and only that to the male head of the family there. The dirty brick walls are his horizon, and the side door of the liquor store sometimes gleams deceptively before his eyes, as the lake mirage does before the traveller in the desert. If he tries to slake his thirst there he will find a hot blast like the desert breath in his throat, and so his Sunday passes. Out of the Elysian Fields and the crowded places of our city the Sunday murders come. The rest of the world prays or rejoices quietly; but the outcome of the Sabbath as seen at the police courts tells how the poor are left to the father of evil and themselves. Can not something be done for the poor in these days of smiling sunshine? If there cannot, O philanthropists, let us think how small a span your generosities cover.

We have referred to the churches and the ministers, and now we return to them. Rarely, indeed, have we noticed so many clergymen of the different denominations from this and neighboring cities going on Summer trips to Europe as during the present season. One or two things are demonstrated by this unexampled exodus of ministers. First, those who have gone at their own charges show very clearly that they have not been paid such meagre salaries as it is generally supposed ministers receive, or that, if they are poorly paid, ministers' families can live more economically than others, else they should not be able to spend a thousand dollars, more or less, on a trip to Europe. A late writer for a Western paper finds that the salaries of clergymen in the United States average only seven hundred dollars per annum. A few years ago we remember another writer, a Massachusetts political economist, set down the annual average at four hundred and fifty dollars. We are glad that such an advance has been made, but it does not meet the case fully. Secondly, a very considerable minority have had their vacation expenses paid to Europe, either by their respective churches as a corporate body or by individual members of the same. This is a good omen. It shows a better appreciation of ministerial talent than, from the general heedlessness and lack of respect for the pulpit manifested by Americans, we could have expected.

Culled from our religious exchanges of the last few weeks we find that between fifty and seventy-five of the leading clergymen of the land have left our shores to spend their vacation in Europe. Of course, none of them are seven hundred dollar men. They include from our own city such ministers as Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth avenue Presbyterian church; Dr. John Thompson, of the Thirty-fourth street Presbyterian church; Dr. Philip Schaff, of the Union Theological Seminary; Rev. Dr. Chapin and Rev. E. C. Sweetzer, Universalist pastors; Rev. W. P. Abbott, pastor of Washington square Methodist Episcopal church; Rev. Deloss Lull and Dr. M. D'C. Crawford, both lately of this city—the latter is now, however, Presiding Elder of the Poughkeepsie district, New York Conference Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. Fathers Hecker and Deshon, of the Paulist church, and others. From Brooklyn have gone Rev. E. P. Ingersoll, D. D., of the Reformed church, and Rev. Mr. Gunnison, of the Universalist church and a few others. From Jersey City Revs. R. B. Yard and A. H. Tuttle, Methodists, and L. D. Senez have gone. Staten Island has sent out Father Conron, of New Brighton. Albany has sent out its quota, with Bishop Doane. West Troy has sent Rev. Father Sheehan; Providence, R. I., Bishop Hendrickson and Father Sullivan. The Presbyterians of Philadelphia have enabled a few of their leading divines, such as Drs. William Speer, E. R. Beadle, G. F. Wiswell, Thomas Murphy and others to spend the Summer in the Old World. And some of the Methodists there and in Baltimore, though not many, have followed their example. The Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church, of Washington, has let Dr. Tiffany go, and one of the Methodist Bishops (Foster) is visiting the missions in Europe, while another (Harris), in company with Dr. Newman, of Washington, is making a tour of the world and calling at the Indian, Chinese and Japanese missions on the way. Boston, Poughkeepsie, Chester, Pa., Milwaukee, Chicago, Newburg, Bangor, Me., and several other cities, East and West and South, have sent ministerial representatives this Summer to Europe and the Holy Land. And besides these hundreds of clergymen are travelling through our own country and gleaning some idea of its grandeur and vastness.

But what of the thousands like the Rev. Mr. Eliseus Pallidman, who cannot afford to travel either at home or abroad, whose faces must be kept at the ministerial grindstone perpetually if they would save themselves and their families from utter starvation. Can not some of their wealthier brethren create a fund something akin to the poor children's fund, or "the fresh air fund," by which so many of the lowly of this city are furnished with pleasure excursions during the Summer? It would not require a great many thousands, and the five or ten thousand dollar preachers of our principal cities would hardly miss a donation from year to year in this direction. Let the suggestion be tried and let the thousands of our poorly paid, half-starved country ministers realize that they are not entirely forgotten by their better-cared-for brethren. Many of the congregations of these country parsons are too poor even to pay them the stipulated three or four hundred dollars a year for which they labor, and a kindness of this sort shown to their ministers would, no doubt, have great influence over them.

But other and more serious questions are suggested by this extensive desertion by the clergy of their pulpits. Do not the congregations need ministering to in Summer as well as in Winter? Are not vice and crime as rampant in warm weather as in cold? And, admitting that church trustees and official boards grant leave of absence to their pastors, and perhaps pay for their tours in Europe, are not their humbler church members, who cannot go either to Europe or to the country, at home entitled to as good talent in one season as another? The entire system of Summer vacations, which has become of late an important part of the contract between ministers and churches in our large cities, is based upon the principle that the rich who pay for the Gospel should have it, while the poor may take their chances. This was the very principle which Jesus of Nazareth in His ministry struggled to confound and overthrow; and it has been the glory of the Church ever since, with, however, some periods of laxity in this regard, to preach the Gospel to the poor in imitation of her Divine Lord and Master. We believe that the most profitable vacations which some of our leading ministers could possibly spend would be among the poor and neglected masses of those populous cities upon whom they have turned their backs for a Summer tour of pleasure in foreign lands.

THE ORANGE PROCESSION yesterday passed off quietly. It was escorted on its line of march by such a powerful and imposing body of police as to be suggestive of serious apprehensions of an attack; but there were no signs of a belligerent force at any point nor of any warlike designs along the route. We are gratified that the affair went off so quietly as hardly to awaken a passing sensation, and we entertain the hope that hereafter there will be no more trouble in New York on account of these Orange processions. Having gained their point of equal rights, these Orangemen should now advance on the line of American citizenship on behalf of civil and religious liberty from the lower plane of the 12th to the higher and broader ground of the Fourth of July. In short, on the nice question of American citizenship and its duties and obligations, these Orange parades and many other foreign institutions here are superfluities of patriotism which it would be well to cast aside as among the dead things of the past.

Our Religious Press Table—The Theological Quill with the Thermometer at Ninety-Six.

Another week's revolution brings again to our religious press table the pleasant faces of the usual number of our clerical contemporaries. With the thermometer at ninety-six in the shade it would not have been surprising to have missed some of these agreeable weekly visitors, but such is not the case. On the contrary we have the pleasure of noticing some improved features in some of these papers. At all events the theological quill does not seem to languish as the mercurial indicator ascends, which is a very happy augury that although the outward flesh may melt the inward fires of sanctity are still kept burning brightly.

Some brilliant woman has sent to the Golden Age "A Screed About Women." Although the word "screed" is a very expressive one to those who know what it means, yet as it does not appear in "Webster's Unabridged" its definition may not be understood by the general reader. Among the literati and quidnuncs it is supposed to mean a long article on a given topic, written in a style sometimes graphic and brilliant and sometimes vapid and stupid. In reality a "screed" in a newspaper or magazine is so called more on account of its quantity than its quality. The "Screed About Women," upon which the Golden Age editorially comments, seems to have been penned for the purpose of showing the inferiority of the female as compared with the male sex. The editor takes up his steel-pointed lance in defence of woman and does noble battle in her behalf. In one respect he agrees with his correspondent, to wit:—

> She says that women are not better than men. This is true. But neither are they worse. There is a good deal of human nature both in men and women. We all have our common root and bloom in the average morality of our times. Society bears a little harder on womanly than on manly derelictions, but this merely leads women to do covertly what men do openly. The two sexes reflect each other's morality. If the standard for both were a little higher it would do neither any harm; and if the standard for both were exactly the same it would do the whole race an equal and stupendous benefit.

"Look on woman's achievements in art!" exclaims the correspondent, belittling her artistic genius.

> Well, responds the editor, there have been very respectable achievements in art by women; if not in the art of painting (though Rosa Bonheur ranks high), yet in the art of acting; for the chief genius of the stage in our generation was Rachel—nothing but a woman. Woman's function in art, as in everything else, is not to do over again what men have done already; but it is to do something different, and that can be done only by women. Is there any man who ever lived who could have written Jane Eyre? No, not Shakspeare himself. It took a woman to do it.

Woman seems to have been a congenial subject of editorial consideration this week among our religious or quasi religious contemporaries. The Independent touches upon the same theme in answer to some remarks made by the Rev. Dr. Bellows, of the Liberal Christian, in a similar connection. Unlike Dr. Bellows, the Independent admires "the intellectual and literary" young woman of twenty—

> Who has had the grace to cultivate her mind as thoroughly as she could, in spite of the sneers of those who regard ignorance and insipidity, and lace and feathers, and piano keys, and a crochet needle, and a soft skin, and a "love, honor and obey" as the ingredients which compose a model woman. Education and intellectuality are the highest kind of culture and refinement, and to most other sensible men do not make women less attractive. The spirit which objects to these has precisely the same barbarous essence as that of the Bushmen chiefs, who value their women for their corpulence and gorge them with milk till they become balls of fat and lose the power of sensible speech.

Referring to the verdict in the Walworth case, the Independent condemns the change in the statute of murder, which, it thinks, will be the reduction of nearly all murders to those of the second degree, and so far the abolition of the death penalty in this State and the substitution therefor of a life imprisonment. The editor thinks it may well be questioned "whether it would not be much safer for the people to go back to the common law definition of murder, and entirely abandon the theory of grades in this crime."

The Methodist affirms that there is a manifest effort going on to connect horse-racing permanently with the Summer life of our great watering places. At Saratoga racing comes regularly with the season; at Long Branch the sporting men are ambitious to establish what they are pleased to call an "American Derby." The writer then proceeds to show what evils will flow from "copying a vicious English practice, a practice condemned by the best English thought."

> We may expect to come of it, he says, the usual crop of miseries which always follow gambling—irregular living, money lossed reaching down in time to those who can ill afford them; dishonesty, breaches of trust and increase of the professionals whose only business is to prey upon the community. The English turf has always had an unsavory odor of rascality, and it is not to be hoped that the American will prove to be any better. Gentlemen may try to lift racing to a plane of decency and honor, but it will not stay there. It drops down by the force of gravity to its own level of trickery and fraud.

Another effect, in the opinion of the Methodist, will come of the establishment of horse racing as a feature of watering place life—"it will drive the moral part of society to establish resorts of their own, from which vicious amusements shall be excluded." This does not seem to have been the case thus far with Saratoga and Long Branch, where the racing season is always the most fashionable, orderly and prosperous of the whole year. Northern clergymen are hardly expected to indulge freely in the amusement of horse racing, but in Kentucky and other parts of the South and Southwest it is as common to see ministers of the Gospel, with their families, enjoying the sports of the turf as it is to see them exhorting in a pulpit or praying at a funeral.

The Liberal Christian (Rev. Dr. Bellows' Unitarian organ) sees "with great pain that serious apprehensions are felt that General Butler will obtain the nomination for Governor in Massachusetts, and equally well-founded fears that he will be elected." The best thing Brother Bellows could do to prevent such a catastrophe would be to "blow up" in advance the delegates to the Republican State Convention.

The Observer discusses the "Progress of Biblical Criticism," in which the theory of Professor Rawlinson that the Hebrews computed the ages of their Patriarchs by months instead of years, is adroitly handled. "Let us read the history accordingly," says the writer, "supplying the true word in order to remove the credulity of the critics":—

> Adam lived 130 months and begat a son. Seth lived 105 months and begat Enos. Enos lived 90 months and begat Cainan. Cainan lived 70 months and begat Mahaleel. And Enoch lived 65 months and begat Methuselah. And all the days of Methuselah were 969 months, and he died; and so on. Truly a wonderful race of beings! At the age of 130 months, which is little more than 10 years, Adam begat his first born, Seth, and at the age of 105 months, a little less than 9 years, Seth begat Enos; and at 90 months, or less than 8 years, Enos begat Cainan; and Cainan begat his first born at 70 months, which is less than 6 years! And this is a satisfactory solution! It is historical and scientific mending with a vengeance.

The Freeman's Journal gives its cordial adhesion to the prospect for securing to the State as a "reserve" the Adirondack region, covering the head waters of the Hudson.

The Jewish Times makes an article upon the fact that Professor Agassiz, in opening the new scientific institution at Penikese Island, invoked the blessing of the Divine Creator. Our Jewish contemporary points with especial satisfaction to the lessons administered by men whose judgment cannot be accused of being influenced by one or the other of the theological schools. Professors Agassiz and Du Boys Raymond, whose lectures were recently delivered before the Society of Natural Philosophers, belong to the profoundest and most advanced thinkers and workers in the realm of natural philosophy. But in studying the works of the Creator they have not lost Him. They, like the Psalmist and Alexander von Humboldt, are led nearer to His throne by the contemplation of His wondrous creation.

In an article on "Persia and the Jews" the Jewish Messenger remarks that

> The Shah of Persia has conferred upon Baron Reuter the most extraordinary powers ever enjoyed by one man since the days of Mordecai the Jew, who was Prime Minister of the ancient Persian king, and ruled over the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of that mighty potentate. The mission of Baron Reuter is to civilize Persia, to bring her into closer and more intimate relation with other nations. He has the monopoly of railways and telegraphs, the control of the Custom Houses, the direction of commercial affairs.

Matilda at the Picnic.

It is the hour of picnics. Every other fence is full of advertisements of moonlight excursions and cheap trips. Superb inducements are offered to those who wish to buy pleasure wholesale and make a corner in sylvan sensuousness. There was a time when the 1st of May was synomymous with a juvenile holiday among the trees and flowers, but we are afraid that time is not, as Macaulay would say, "within the memory of men still living." Then the schoolgirl arrayed herself in spotless muslin, and materfamilias attended with one eye on her daughter and the other on the hamper. There was a healthy and innocent family feeling in those ancient picnics. They were events to be anticipated for a year to come, and to be affectionately reverted to a year after they were over. Possibly a clergyman attended and opened the exercises with a prayer not too long. They were occasions made for children, and children gave character to them. If any of the attending teachers could be accused of flirtation, the flirtation was of a sober and restrained description. The fact was recognized that childhood is peculiarly the season for that free, artless, animal enjoyment which the picnic, under proper conditions, is calculated to promote. With the lapse of a few lustres we have arrived at another standard, and are not so pure. Doubtless there are such things as eminently proper picnics—picnics where no man gets drunk and no woman gets insulted; but these are getting fewer every year. The facility with which the picnic is converted into an excuse for ruffianism in one sex, and frailty, to call it by no harsher name, in the other, is uncomplimentary to human kind. One would imagine that the beauty of nature, freshly escaped from the green thraldom of the Spring, would woo even the depraved heart and blunted mind to thoughts of purity and peace. But the contrary seems to be the case. The lonely dell where innocent flatteries might be paid which it would do the violets no harm to listen to is converted into the bower of an orgy, and the grotto where love might be spoken, and no harm done, becomes the lair of sensuality and lust. Almost every other gentle landscape which the genius of the modern picnic touches is desecrated by the contact. The indignant foliage rustles with the shame that has been wrought there, and could the modest leaves tell all they have looked down upon we should have a poetical police report delivered in æolian cadences. All the splendid livery of nature is spattered with the moral mud the modern picnic has thrown upon it. It is not to be wondered at, then, that Matilda's mistress objects to her going to festivals of this order. We are not ashamed to confess that, to a certain extent, our sympathies are with Matilda. Doomed by an inscrutable Providence to a culinary existence, with little but a surreptitious male cousin to brighten her pathway between the coal cellar and the stationary tubs, her fate is far from enviable. Let us endeavor to find out what her virtues are (a work in which it must be acknowledged she gives us very little assistance), and to credit her with them accordingly. If she breaks off handles and purloins the silver, and leaves without warning, and forges ideal "recommends," these are the venalities incident to her temptations and her temperament. But until she reforms in these and other particulars which it is not necessary to mention, perhaps it is just as well for her to stay away from the picnic. So polish the silver, Matilda, and do the meat to a turn, and let us hope that the benificent law of compensation will make it all right with you some time or other, here or hereafter. But picnics are not for you. Neither do we know that, as they are at present too often conducted, they are exactly the thing for your betters. Oh, if we could only have the picnic pure and simple, as Adam and Eve might have held it ere Eve picked the apple to make Adam a turnover! We want no green groves demoralized; no glowworm's glen of chastity made infamous. Childhood and wild wood are moral as well as literal rhymes—the one is the patrimony of the other, and we pollute this fair inheritance every time we sanction a party of brawlers among it under the name of a picnic. Possibly there were errors in the old-fashioned festival, but there are crimes in the new-fashioned one. For every accident then we have a vice now; for every casualty an outrage. The modern picnic is in numerous excuses only an excuse for licentious brutality on the part of one sex and a semi-inebriated collusion on the part of the other. More than half conscious of the passionate dénouement to which the flushed transition stages that she yields to will lead, the ruined girl may almost be said to connive with her tempter. Parents, guardians, masters, mistresses could, if they behaved with bravery and tact, do a great deal toward reducing the evil, and perhaps will make the effort after having suffered a little longer from their supineness, cowardice and neglect.

The Significant Scene at the Goodrich Inquest.

A strange female group was that which sat at the inquest yesterday in the Goodrich case, when Lizzie Lloyd King, the woman known as "Kate Stoddard," was found by the Coroner's jury to be the murderess of her quondam paramour. New York, in its busy round of life, is well used to scenes that epitomize the most grievous problems of humanity; but it is long since it has seen so near it a picture like that wherein a calm, pale, self-confessed murderess met the tear-filled gaze of a woman—Miss Adelaide Palm—who had been the fiancée of the murdered man. Before that woman, widowed of her love, sat a third female—Lucette Myers—with cold, quick-glancing eyes, who had been the rival of each of the others in the passions, not the heart, of the man slain last March. A fourth woman looked coldly, composedly on—the amateur female detective who gave Lizzie Lloyd King up to the police. It would seem as though the spirit of female honor had arranged the tableau in revenge for the wickedness that a man had wrought. It brings strikingly forward the evils of our society in a manner that will seize upon all who should learn therefrom. In the case of Fisk an exceptionally dramatic scene was presented, with a fast woman in the foreground. Happily, it was a case that can have but few repetitions, for the actors were out of the ordinary line of men and women. Bejewelled glare and coarse passion, quarrelling with an unfaithful mistress and a friend turned bloody-minded enemy made up that tragedy. In the case of Walworth it was the curse of ill-assorted marriage, breeding parricide, that shocked the public eye. The slaying of the Deputy United States Marshal Stephenson in Jersey City on Friday last by a desperate Russian sailor was uncontrollable malice and ruffianism, striking desperately at all law in the rude, barbarous way in which Russians essay in their own land how to temper their condition with assassination. Küstner's murder, undoubtedly for plunder, may have in it something more mysterious as an exciting cause; it is the outlawry of civilization fiercely and bloodily at war with respectability and order. The Goodrich case surpasses all these in one particular, that it is a realization of the dangers that lie in the path of womanhood, poor and well-to-do, morally frail and serenely chaste. With the murdered man removed it is emphatically a woman's case, and our young women of all stations will do better to learn from the morals it points than from the flaunting romances which they read. The murder stories we have referred to are confined to very limited classes. The Goodrich homicide has lessons for we know not how many thousands in the group of cities on the Bay of New York. It holds its head of false pretences among the respectable classes; its feet are in the blackest mire of the city's immorality. Who will not pity the young affianced who gave her heart to a man whose decency was a sham? Who can say what deeper tragedy that murder saved her from had she been the wife of Charles Goodrich? Who can bend a glance which is all harshness on the murderess, deceived and cast off as she found herself, when uncurbed passion fanned the savage fires of malignity to murder heat in her poisoned heart? That with all the horror of such a crime upon her head she could "weave wanton spells anew" shows that too much pity for her would be misplaced; yet it indicates how all sense of fine morality had been burned out of her soul by the searing life she had eagerly learned to lead. Lucette Myers, another type of the same social cankering, wanted, perhaps, only occasion to have stood in the fearful position of Lizzie King. It is a sorrowful story, and begets a thousand queries that it would be hard to answer. We may propound one of them:—How many Lizzie Kings and Lucette Myers are standing on the verge of the same precipice, with a Charles Goodrich tempting them, pushing over the affrighting verge; how many Adelaide Palms are laying up a store of love that will turn to ashes in their heart when they have learned the truth too late?

Terrible Assassinations Under the Radical Flag—"Mounting in Hot Haste" and Hurried Marches to the Front—Constitutionalist Rights for Cuba and Porto Rico—Special Legislation with Respect to Slavery—Carlist Advance Into Old Castile.

TELEGRAMS TO THE NEW YORK HERALD.

MADRID, July 12, 1873.

During the session of the Spanish Cortes yesterday evening the Minister of War announced that the government had received despatches confirming a report, which was current in Madrid during the day, of the defeat near Ripoll of the republicans, under General Cabrinetty, and the death of that officer.

The Minister also said despatches had come to hand which confirmed the reports of an Internationalist insurrection and excesses in Alcoy, Province of Alicante.

The government also received intelligence of the departure from Malaga of General Carvajal, with a force of volunteers and artillery. His destination is not known.

General Velarde, with a body of troops, is hastening to Alcoy, and it is expected he will arrive there to-day.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS FOR PORTO RICO AND CUBA.

Upon the assembling of the Cortes to-day Señor Suner, Minister of the Colonies, presented and read a bill applying to the island of Porto Rico the constitutional clause of 1869 with reference to individual rights; also applying the same clause to the island of Cuba, with the exception of the territory occupied by the insurgents.

A despatch has been sent to the Captain General of Cuba authorizing him to adopt the same extraordinary measures against the insurrectionists in that island as have been resorted to by the government for the suppression of the Carlist insurrection in Spain.

The abolition of slavery in Cuba will be realized by a special law.

MURDER AND ARSON AT ALCOY—RADICAL RIOT AND CITIZEN RUIN.

The internationalist insurrectionists have assassinated the Mayor of Alcoy, notwithstanding the fact that he was a thorough republican and spent a fortune in the cause of the Republic. His body was dragged through the streets of the town by a mob, which kept up a continuous yelling. The Collector of Taxes was also assassinated and his body treated with the same indignities as that of the Mayor.

The cotton factory of Perez Puig and four other factories at Alcoy have been burned by the mob.

A MISSIONARY WELCOMES THE HERALD.

Christianity's Work Among the Brotherly Love City's Savages—Respectable Men Receiving Rent from Disorderly Houses and Thieves' Dens.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10—Midnight.

"I have frequently appealed to the local journals of this city, and I have asked Mr. Lippincott to follow the example of other publishers, and present in his illustrated magazine, or in a special sheet, pictures of the rookeries you see about you, and then give them to humanity exactly as they are. I have appeared even as late as last year, before the city authorities and asked their aid for extending the mission, but all in vain, for in each effort I was quietly rebuffed, and turned away without a cent. I have frequently said that some day the New York dailies would send their correspondents here, and that they would become the means of setting our own journals an example, and of acquainting the country with its greatest haunt of sin and misery. I am glad that you have come. In the name of their mission I thank you, and bid you hearty welcome!"—Rev. John D. Long, Missionary.

Immediately after my arrival in this city I presented my card to Captain Heins, Chief of the Detective Police, and in a few words described the object of the visit. The gentleman extended me an earnest greeting, and, after commenting to some length upon the magnitude and danger of the undertaking, gave me in charge of Mr. William P. Mears, one of his most steady and reliable associates, with the following directions:—"You are absolutely excused from all duties to-night, for the purpose of conducting this gentleman around the city. Take him through all the haunts you know of and pass by no house about which there is the slightest interest. See that no harm befalls him."

PHILADELPHIA'S "FIVE POINTS."

In company with Mr. Mears we set out from the headquarters of the city police at about seven o'clock, and after a long, circuitous walk we found ourselves in lower Sixth street, among the scum of the city and in the destitute habitations of the poor. The contrast between this locality and similar ones in New York is very great, and I doubt whether there could be found among any of our dingiest thoroughfares one so as this. The street was filled with graceless vagabonds, and black and white were indiscriminately blended. The clothes of the women were rags, and the beards of the men were all unshorn, while drunkenness and riot were seen on every side. Hundreds of men and women of all ages, of all nationalities, of all colors, who by day are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the city, cluster here at nightfall to spend their earnings for drink, which inflame their minds to the highest state of frenzy, until their sole intent is to riot and their highest ambition is to fight. There were white men lying upon the pavement senseless, and there were black women lying there in the same condition beside them. Women with swollen faces and bloodshot eyes hung in an almost nude state from the windows above, and other females, lower yet in their degradation, glared fiercely at us from the cellars below—a street in a ward which has no bright side, and in which

REEKING IN FILTH AND POVERTY

VIRTUE OR MORALITY HAS NO ABODE.

"Don't get nervous yet," said the detective, as an indecent incident caused me to pull him along; "this is but the beginning; keep all your nerve for the end."

A LOWER DEPTH.

From Sixth street we passed into the narrow alley of St. Mary's. This is celebrated for being the vilest and wickedest in town, and we believe it is the vilest and wickedest in the world. Upon the corner stands the dramshop of the two Spaniards, S. Lertora and G. Arata. We entered and were presented to the proprietor. Its interior arrangement is both novel and striking, and New York contains nothing like it. The apartment is of medium size, and directly opposite the entrance there stands a bar; behind the counter tiers of kegs rest against the wall, from which their contents are drawn through spiggots. The room was literally the majority of whom were women. We make no exaggeration when we say that at least fifty wenches were crowded in a writhing, twisting mass between the counter and the door, and, as the proprietor's attention was soon called elsewhere, the detective and myself were the only two white persons in the room. The inmates of this place comprehended all conditions of their sex, from girls, who appeared to be mere children, up to crones and hags in the last stages of destitution and disease. The woman behind the bar was never idle, and her customers drank the liquid fire she served by the glass full. No sooner would one bevy of tipplers master their dram than another bevy would take their places; those in front swore for being hurried, while those behind grumbled for being delayed. The garments which clung about the forms of these creatures were soiled and ragged, and upon their skirts was the filth of the gutter outside.

CRAMMED WITH NEGROES,

A TRANSFORMATION SCENE.

"Come this way," said my friend, after pausing here for a few moments more, and by dint of great labor we wedged our way through this crowd until we gained the upper end of the bar and stood against a slight partition which separated us from some other apartment beyond. At a whistle from the detective we were admitted, and the sudden transformation was almost dazzling. The two rooms presented about the same contrast as a Water street grog ship and Delmonico's. The bar in this room was merely an extension of the counter in the other, but was adorned with tasteful ornamentation and very rich panellings; behind it, in rows one above the other, stood handsome decanters, and in them glistened the liquor, while the background was wrought in pyramids of exquisite and dainty glassware. There were many tables in this room, and upon them fell a flood of soft and mellow light.

Who were the customers grouped about these tables?

Negroes, every single breathing soul of them!

Not negroes, however, poor and ragged and destitute; not negroes drunken and bloated and riotous; not negroes crawling up from the gutters and reeling in, half frenzied, from the cellars; but negroes well dressed and high-toned, clothed in nicely fitting garments, appropriately supplemented with eye-glasses and canes—the typical representatives of the African aristocracy—the elaborate and ornamented colored beaux of the town. Their amusements were those of the best metropolitan clubs—poker, whist, cribbage and loo. Plebeian rye or ragamuffin gin was no drink for them; they moistened their lips with wines and cordials. They indulged in no wrangling or disputes; the burden of their conversation was not obscene; they talked of politics, religion, yachting and the turf. Thus, under the same roof—nay, even upon the same floor, and separated from each other by a single partition—were two grades of blacks, which, though of the same race, were as different in their aims, habits and morals as though they had been born in different countries and paid their reverence to two distinct flags. But oh, how painful was the contrast! There could be no such thing as affiliation between the two. Indeed, I was informed that the intrusion of either party upon the other was like the insertion of a firebrand within a magazine, and hence all the effects which the association between the two would produce, all the advantages attendant upon the union of these alien elements existing in the same race, are lost, and the doors of communication are closed.

CHEAP RUM SHOPS.

When we came from this resort night had far advanced, and the alley of St. Mary's was very foul and dark. This lane is one continuous line of rum shops and assignation houses. The liquor stores seem no larger than store boxes, and the poison is sold for five cents per glassful. While we were in one of these, near the opening of the alley, a drunken ruffian rushed in and asked for seven cents' worth. He received in return an ordinary soda water bottle more than half full. I saw a woman served with three cents' worth, and she received as much as he who paid five.

ST. MARY'S LODGERS.

As we left this place our detective whispered:—"Have a care. The pavement is filled with sleepers."

And it was. People who reside in New York and complain because our authorities are not more vigilant concerning the haunts of the lower classes have no idea how infinitely superior they are to those of the lower classes of this boastful city. It may be impossible for many to credit what we say, but every available inch of St. Mary's was crowded with human beings. Upon the pavement, and in the very dust and dirt of the street, men and women were lying piled upon each other. The intense heat of the Summer drives them from their low and squalid cabins, and in a semi-stupor and seminudeness they lie down in the street filth to sleep. It was almost impossible for us to step without disturbing some one, and at every disturbance there was a curse. Men with sunken eyes glared upon us threateningly, and women stretched out their long, gaunt fingers after us and in one instance caught our garments. Never shall I forget one thing which we saw—a woman lying closely against the side of her cabin and over her bosom two dogs were wrangling for a resting place.

"BIG GABE," THE GIANT NEGRESS.

When half way through this alley the detective paused for a moment and called my attention to a monstrosity, sitting in a huge chair before an open window. She is black; her name is Big Gabe; she has no other; she is simply Big Gabe; she keeps an assignation house of the lowest and filthiest order; her height is six feet, five inches, and her weight is 218 pounds. Sitting as she did in a costume low at the neck and open at the sleeves she was the most loathsome and disgusting creature that I have ever beheld.

AN EFFORT FOR REFORM.

We had no desire to tarry longer in St. Mary's, and we bade the detective take us elsewhere. He led us to the street which was formerly known as Old Bedford, but which is now called Alaska. Here an effort, and a noble one, has been made to wrest from destruction hundreds of souls, whom poverty has taught to so degrade themselves—an effort which for twenty years the public authorities have never given a cent to support. We refer to the "Bedford street Mission," in charge of Rev. John D. Long, a gentleman whose society we left about an hour ago. This man is a Christian, hero, nobleman. He gave up his charge, he left his family, and he has given his life for these poor, ruined souls. His noble-hearted wife is with him in his work, and they live amid all the wickedness and sin of this filthy and abominable neighborhood. All the traces of civilization which now and then crop out in unexpected places, the quaint little school house, and the slender walls of brick which occasionally peep up from between the tottering sides and crumbling roofs of the old frame rookeries, and all their blessed hopes and aspirations, which, unknown to the many, still come swelling up from a few repentant hearts, are solely due to him, to his love for his cause, to his remarkable personal magnetism and his ability to touch the spirits of others with that enthusiasm which at all times kindles and pervades his own. Aside from individual contributions their mission desires no support.

We entered the residence of the clergyman and explained our business. A look of surprise crossed his face as he extended his hand, and immediately after we were seated he made the statement with which this letter opens, saying, furthermore, "When I first came here I did not see how I could remain; men knocked each other down at midday, and at night there was a fight at every threshold. I was hated and insulted, and came near losing my life on more than one occasion. I have been in other cities, among the lowest form of society; I have explored your own notorious Five Points, but they cannot be compared with this neighborhood for a moment.

A REGIMENT OF ROUGHS LOCKED UP.

About six or eight weeks ago disorder became so rampant that the absolute safety of the city demanded an interference upon the part of the officers, and over eight hundred persons were sent away to jail. You hardly miss them. It was only to-day that I stumbled upon a horrible resort, in which I found, in the upper story, a room full of people entirely destitute of clothing. People simply live together here, the black with the white, the white with the black, and wedding ceremonies are very rare.

A MONSTROUS CRIME.

Some time ago a young girl, of fine face and figure, wandering from the popular streets, was decoyed by a rascal into a dram shop nearby and was prevailed upon to drink a glass of soda water. Of course, the water was drugged, and in a half-stupefied state she was dragged into an assignation house. Her beautiful hair was cut off close to her scalp and sold in the market for $8. She was stripped of every article of her wearing apparel, which went the same way as her hair, and when yet under the influence of the drug she was brutally abused by a number of wretches in the shape of men."

"New York is foul enough, I will admit; but New York in her record has no crime so foul as this. And take these cellars. Men have crawled down into them to sleep at night and have been carried out dead the next morning. The detective will tell you that, in the Winter season, people will lie in the gutter, as you have seen them lying there to-night, and in the snowstorms have been frozen."

"To whom do these places belong?" I asked; "to those who live in them?"

"By no means," returned Mr. Long. "That is by far the saddest part of the story. They are the property of men in easy circumstances, who try to conceal their proprietorship by the person whom they send here to collect the rents. I regret to tell you what I now shall, but it is the truth. One of the filthiest dens in this whole neighborhood is owned by a clergyman! You would be surprised, sir, could you see the good people who by some means or other find their way to this place. Two days ago a man of means, and one who moves in good and cultivated society, came to me and said that he was seeking his wife; she was in the habit of drinking once in every two years and he feared she may have been decoyed hither, but he failed to find her. But come, sir, let me show you what we are doing in

THE MISSION SCHOOL."

We left the quiet study of the minister and with him entered the mission chapel. There is in it a school for infant children, another for bootblacks and newsboys and still another for teaching the lighter industrial arts. The cutest thing by all odds about the place is the swimming school, in the basement. There are two great tanks filled with water, and each tank can accommodate twenty-five youthful bathers. Mr. Long says that when the little bootblacks and newsboys get in the tubs they sing and shout, and clap their hands and roll about and dive, as if no demonstration were sufficient to fully manifest their thankfulness, while at every kick the water flies up to the ceiling and rolls over the sides in great splashes. When asked to build these simple tanks the public authorities refused to do so.

A QUEER REASON.

"What do you suppose was the reason they gave? They feared they might be used by vagrant Irishmen."

What has the Common Council against the Hibernian that it does not want him to keep clean?

After leaving the mission school, Mr. Long went with us among the rookeries. Twenty feet away from this school you would not suspect its existence, for the same miserable sights met our eyes; but now and then there would come up, as if from the filth of the streets, a dainty form, and a sweet face, touched with a glow of gentleness and gratitude, would break into smiles as the little one would bid the minister good evening, and by this simple act we knew him to be loved, and felt that our sex had indeed been crowned with nobility.

THE DENS AND RESORTS OF THIEVES.

In a little while we came to what is known as "The Den," and it was here that hundreds of roguhs were held in until the authorities could provide proper quarters for them in the Penitentiary. It was simply a lot fenced in and had no roof, and while confined there the thieves wrangled and fought among themselves, and one of them was found dead upon the removal of the others. Still further on we came across "Doggy Dougherty's place," the resort of the vilest thieves and ruffians in town. But enough of this for the present. I have thus tried to give you a glimpse of what is above ground, and in my next will treat of the underground dens—the five cent lodging cellars—which, the police inform me, are more horrible still. In our next tour Mr. Long will accompany us, and the letter will give a few recollections of the "Eagle's Nest."

OBITUARY.

Rebecca W. Easterbrook.

Miss Rebecca W. Easterbrook, an authoress of varied ability, died on Friday afternoon of consumption. She had never enjoyed robust health, but the disease which speedily closed her life was of sudden and unexpected appearance. Miss Easterbrook was well known among journalists, she having been in their ranks for several years. She was connected with the editorial staff of the Standard during the life of that journal, and contributed to its columns a number of pathetic poems and others of a quaint character, which were widely circulated through the States. At the same time and since, almost up to her death, she wrote for Harper's Magazine, Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner and the Ledger. Miss Easterbrook was earnestly ambitious to show in all branches of literature. She made a venture as a dramatist; but her play, called "Honor," has never been produced. A novel, written by her recently, is soon to be published by James R. Osgood & Co. Miss Easterbrook's career was too short to allow of her doing anything which might serve as a memorial of the literary ability which she was known by her friends and journalistic associates to have possessed. Her funeral will take place to-day from the residence of her sister "Eleanor Kirk" (Mrs. Ames), 238 Macon street, Brooklyn.

THE ANNUAL POLICE PARADE.

How the Orangemen Escorted Our Blue Coats Yesterday on Their Annual Show-Off.

Eight Hundred Policemen and an Escort of Nearly 300 Orangemen.

A Display of Blue Coats and Brass Buttons.

THE ORANGEMEN IN THEIR GLORY.

The Orangemen had their parade yesterday; that is to say, they managed to get out into the street from their various lodges, double quick, long before noon and succeeded by ten o'clock to get into position. They numbered in all just 281. The procession started in the usual way. It was headed off by a man in citizen dress on horseback, who made everybody believe by his endeavors to deceive that the procession was to be a very grand affair. He swept along quite grandly with his black horse and short stirrups and made for himself, although he was unknown, a really enviable equestrian reputation. Still he was not

THE FRONTAGE OF THE PARADE.

The lines were formed regularly and the Orangemen appeared to pretty good advantage. There were 281 all told, small boys and all, the resplendent flags that recounted the great battle of the Boyne and all the other standards counting for nothing, with their four carriers. There were also two bands of music.

It was near ten o'clock before the procession started, and a nice procession it was. Head and front of all was a platoon of policemen, and then came a carriage, with Chief Matsell, President Smith, Mr. Gardner and General Duryee, the man who wanted to make rifle mincemeat makers of the force. They all looked well. President Smith said to a bystander that he was out for an airing only. So said Duryee, so said Gardner, so said Matsell. One and all of them feared no trouble. They had hired a carriage at public expense to do their duty, and that duty was to head the procession with dignity, without any idea of

GIVING DIGNITY TO THE PROCESSION.

And thus they went on smilingly. Each and every one of them looked his best and did his best to impress the lookers on with a profound conviction that they and they alone were able to give the parade a complexion of haut ton; and they succeeded. The fact is that the police were so numerous and the Orangemen so small in numbers by comparison that the carriage containing the Commissioners was the cynosure of all eyes. Many of the unsophisticated took Mr. Smith as the head centre of the orange Peelers instead of the blue Peelers, and General Duryee was set down more than once along the route as a good old fashioned standard bearer of the glorious old Dutchman who whipped somebody at Londonderry so many years ago that no accurate history can be obtained thereof. The fact must be stated that all preventions against riot were bravely and considerately taken by the police authorities long before daylight. And the arrangements were admirable. But what were they all? This simply.—The putting on in procession form of eight hundred men and over to guard

A LITTLE OVER TWO HUNDRED INSIGNIFICANTS;

800 men, in point of fact, who had been on duty for from ten to twenty-four hours before, and who, by reason of the procession and its ridiculous necessities, would have to be on duty for twenty-four hours again before another rest was taken. Yet the procession was in every way a success. Not, indeed, that anybody thought that the Orangemen were out to air themselves—not at all. The police so outnumbered the few who paraded, scarfed and bedraggled with orange colors, that no person who was not blind could fail to see that the parade was really a police parade. The men, with their orange outfittings, started in good time. It is true, from their various lodges, all gorgeous and bespangled with the insignia of their clubs; but for all that the parade was a police parade. The Orangemen were in spaces here and there in the procession line two deep; but all along, from head to tail of it, the police were two deep on each side of the street.

The route of the procession was from Lafayette place through Astor place to Broadway to Fourteenth street, around the Washington Monument to Sixteenth street, through Irving Place around Gramercy Park to Madison avenue to Thirty-fourth street to Fifth avenue, thence down to Union square, where the dismissal was had.

There was

among the people, and the sidewalk committees that followed it were no more numerous than those which are always found ready to follow any military company that goes through the streets with a drum and fife. Altogether the Orangemen, as an inside escort to a splendid body of disciplined policemen, did all they could to look well. They did not look well at all; but as the police did, and as the parade was really a police parade, they have nothing to regret. Yet after all, why should 800 men be put on extra duty and put to the loss of several hours of sleep for the sake of a lot of fanatics who want to air their fine clothes once a year? The Orangemen have demonstrated their right to parade for a third time—rather the people of the city have given their consent that a body of men, carrying banners with loyalty to British sovereignty emblazoned upon them, can go from street to street unmolested, and it is certainly about time that the farce came to an end. The police want rest, and the people cannot afford to laugh forever.

The "Glorious Memory" in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, July 12, 1873.

The parade of the Loyal Orange lodges took place here this morning. The procession was a long one, and the members, dressed in new and neat regalias, looked well. A heavy force of police was stationed along the route, but thus far there has not been the slightest disturbance.

Honors to King Billy in Toronto.

TORONTO, July 12, 1873.

The Orange demonstration to-day was probably the best that ever took place here. Seventy-four Orange and twelve Young Britain Lodges paraded the streets, with twenty-one bands of music and thirty-five banners. In the afternoon the processionists assembled at Queen's Park, where speeches were delivered by prominent officials. Everything passed off in an orderly manner.

THE UTE INDIANS ON THEIR GOOD BEHAVIOR.

LAMARIE CITY, Wy. T., July 12, 1873.

Colonel J. S. Littlefield, United States Indian Agent for the White River Utes, reached the railroad last evening and sent a special despatch, saying that the White River Utes are all on their reservation and perfectly peaceful and friendly. None of them have been killed or wounded, so far as known. It appears now that the Rawlins Indian fight was with a band of predatory, thieving Arapahoes, who were trying to pass themselves off as Utes.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., July 12, 1873.

The proceedings of the International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association to-day were again largely attended. During the morning W. H. Hodden, of Great Britain, was formally introduced, and told the delegates of the Association work in England and Ireland. Dr. Thompson, of the New York Medical University, read an able paper upon the Bible and Bible class instruction, which was ordered to be printed. Mr. Cobb, of Cleveland, gave particulars of the railroad work in that city, where railroad companies provided the Association with elegant rooms, and 5,000 railroad employés attend the meetings. At half-past five P. M. the usual resolutions of thanks were adopted, when the entire Convention sung the "Railroad Song," following it with the Doxology and benediction. The Convention then adjourned sine die.

To-night another large meeting was held at the Opera House, the leading men of the Convention addressing it.

To-morrow all the pulpits in the city will be filled with delegates.

Over one-half of the delegates have left for their homes, and the balance will depart on Monday.

A JERSEY PLEASURE PARTY TURNED INTO ONE OF DEEP SORROW.

A few days ago a party of Sunday school scholars and grown people started from Belvidere, Warren county, on a picnic excursion up the river. There they stopped at a charming and very romantic spot called the Cascade, and spread out dinner on a large table rock. Suddenly, in the midst of their merriment and festivity, they were startled by a rumbling ominous noise rolling overhead. All started away except a lovely girl of fifteen, named Caroline Bodermer, who delayed. Presently down flew a large boulder from the overhanging hill and struck her across the temple. She died shortly afterwards, in spite of the best medical skill of the place.

THE GORDON KNOT.

The Manitoba Complication in a New Light.

A Change in Public Opinion Favorable to the Attempted Abductors of the Absconding Lord—United States Consul Taylor on Common Law and Leg Bail.

FORT GARRY, Manitoba, July 11, 1873.

The most important event on the fourth day of the investigation of the case of Lord George Gordon was the introduction of papers found in the possession of Minneapolis detectives, which was a question of the legality of the arrest of this gentleman. Consul Taylor will publish the following card in the newspapers to-morrow, developing the theory of the defence:—

THE UNITED STATES CONSUL ON COMMON LAW AND BAIL.

TO THE PUBLIC—Having, in common with the entire community, misapprehended the clause of the legal right to arrest Gordon, and the letters addressed to me on the subject being in custody, I have availed myself of information derived from Hon. E. M. Wilson, from Minnesota, to present a statement of the grounds which, if permitted to appeal, I am prepared to urge upon this Court, and I feel, therefore, justified in making the present publication.

Gordon was arrested in New York for embezzlement. Roberts released him from prison by becoming his bail for $37,500. Gordon ran away to Manitoba. As the bond was about to become forfeited Roberts procures proper exemplifications of the bail piece and executes a power of attorney to Hay authorizing him to act. Hay, with the authority, goes, with an assistant, to Manitoba, and makes the arrest by common law. A bail has the right to take his principal wherever and whenever he can find him. When a prisoner is released from prison he is considered in the continual custody of his bail. This right is not controlled by States or national lines, but runs wherever the common law exists, if the right has not been taken away by statute treaties, and extractions of laws have nothing to do with the question. They relate to delivery for crimes. Gordon is not sought on account of embezzlement, but to relieve Roberts of his liability. There is no process, no international arrangement, by which Roberts can obtain him. No governmental demand can be legally made or responded to for the purpose of restoring Gordon to his bail. Roberts must take him by his common law right. What Roberts can do his duly authorized agent can do.

The taking of Gordon, by Hay, was no violation of law. The common law right exists in Maintoba, uncontrolled by any statute. It has been frequently ruled in the United States that the bail had the right to come from one State into another to take his principal. The jurisdiction of the different States are as distinct as those of New York and Manitoba, and it is rested wholly on the common law principle, equally in force here as there. With this exposition I submit that the gravity of the question involved, as well as the interests of both countries, requires that all the testimony which the defence is prepared to show should be admitted, and, as an act of international courtesy, that Mr. Wilson may be heard during the present examination. I think it not inappropriate for me to add, that from an examination and knowledge of all the facts, it will appear that there was no intention on the part of any one to violate the international law or to insult this government, but that every one connected with it sincerely believed that they were acting in accordance with their legal right. J. W. TAYLOR, United States Consul.

A Change in Public Opinion Produced by Recent Developments.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 12, 1873.

A special despatch from Minneapolis says:—During the proceedings in the Gordon case at Fort Garry yesterday the legal papers in the possession of Captain Hay were submitted to the Court, whereupon the legal point on which the authority to arrest Gordon depended being exposed there was a decided reaction in public opinion among the Manitobans immediately after the introduction of the papers.

Following his card to the public Consul Taylor declares that the gravity of the question involved as well as the interests of both countries require that all the testimony which the defence is prepared to show should be admitted; and, that as an act of international courtesy, Mr. Wilson should be heard during the examination. Other advices state that the investigation has brought out the fact that the American prisoners were arrested south of the new boundary line, on American soil. This will work new complications, although it cannot be yet surmised just what effect the discovery will have on the future proceedings.

THE MURDERED MARSHAL.

The Dark Fate of John E. Stephenson—Examination of His Death Wounds and Commencement of the Inquest—The Brothers, Wife and Family of the Deceased Viewing the Sad Remains.

The body of Deputy Marshal Stephenson, who was murdered in Jersey City on Friday afternoon, lay desolate in the dark room of the Rink throughout the same night. No friendly faces appeared in the dismal hall, except that of one brother, because his other relatives had no tidings of his premature death, and they slept on Friday night in ignorance of his unhappy fate—his four other brothers, his wife and his six helpless children. Not in complete ignorance, however, did his loving wife repose, for in the wild wanderings of her imagination, while in a profound slumber, by one of those singular coincidences which sceptics explain by the doctrine of chances—which the more poetical attribute to the work of the human soul after it has been released from its casement of clay, she dreamed that she saw her husband felled by the hand of an assassin, and she awoke in the tremor that follows in the wake of frightening dreams. When morning dawned her brothers went to break the doleful tidings to her, but she cried out:—"Stop! tell me nothing; Johnny is murdered; I dreamed it last night." She was fearful of visiting the scene of his death yesterday. His three brothers repaired to the Rink and took a first look at the lifeless remains of the victim. Prepared as they were for the gloomy sight, they became paralyzed with grief and emotion, and it was some time before they sufficiently recovered themselves to return with the sad burden to New York. They took the body to the house of Mrs. Stephenson, in this city, and the scene that ensued upon the arrival might, perhaps, better be passed in silence. The little children have scarcely sense enough to realize the loss they have now sustained. Poignant as is the sorrow that overwhelms the afflicted wife, she may find no little consolation in the fact that her husband perished heroically while in the performance of duties that he owed alike to the country and to his own family. Hence it is that a subscription list has already been started at 41 Chambers street in aid of the bereft family. For the information of those anxious to learn the nature of Stephenson's death wounds the following is the statement of Drs. Bueh and Petrie, who made a post-mortem examination:—An external wound was found on the back, four inches below the left shoulder blade. A crescent-shaped, gaping wound, three inches to the right of the left nipple, was two inches in length and penetrated downward in the direction of the left side. The chest was opened, and the fifth rib was severed at its cartilaginous portion about one and a half inches to the left of the sternum. A large clot of blood was lying directly over the heart and under the external wound. This was carefully removed, and the breast wound was found to penetrate the pericardium and the left ventricle of the heart near the apex, passing completely through the wall and into the cavity.

—— forsook
Its mansion in this fleshy nook,

The prisoner passed the night and day following in the county jail. He frequently knelt on the floor of the cell, and prayed vehemently in his native Russian tongue. While the surgeon was tying a handkerchief around his wounded neck he asked, "Does that hurt you?" Whereto the prisoner replied, "Oh, no; it hurt more byme by," alluding to the death he expected to die in at one-ment for his crime. He paced the cell nervously during the greater part of the day. His parents and one sister still live in Finland. He has a few friends in a sailors' boarding house on the east side of this city, and it is not improbable, from rumors now afloat, that some of those friends were apprised of his intention to murder the marshal. It would be unwise to say anything more in this connection until the inquest reveals the facts. A jury was empanelled yesterday by Coroner Reinhardt, and the inquisition was adjourned until Wednesday, in order that ample time may be had to ascertain how many persons were conspirators of Metland in the shocking deed. The reasons for suspecting this are well founded. It appears that the missing sailor, Pritt, was well acquainted in the sailors' boarding house above alluded to, and that Metland endeavored to shield him and his confrères. When the deceased undertook to search the boarding house for the deserters the landlord and Metland made a powerful resistance, and Stephenson only escaped by drawing his pistol. Warrants were then issued for the arrest of the landlord and Metland on a charge of resisting an officer. The accused were arrested and taken before United States Commissioner Davenport, and the landlord was held to bail in the sum of $2,500. Metland was released on his own recognizance on condition that he would accompany Stephenson and identify Pritt, the leader of the gang of deserters. Metland at first appeared to act in good faith and went with deceased to identify Pritt. When he came to Jersey City, however, he seems to have warmed up to his real purpose and been fully prepared to accomplish it while deceased was procuring the endorsement of Commissioner Muirhead. Whether he was incited to the bloody work or not makes little difference to himself. He is now in hourly expectation of a violent death, as he understands English but imperfectly and fancies that the dispensation of justice in this country is as swift as it is in Russia. He will soon find out his mistake. There is some hope, however, that one of the incorruptible judges of the Jersey Bench may try the case.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement of the past week, reported to-day, is less favorable than that of its immediate predecessor, showing, as it does, a decrease of $372,275 in the legal reserve. The reserve of 25 per cent, previously reported, amounted to $16,808,000. To-day it was $16,435,725. The increase in deposits was $6,547,500; in circulation, $15,600. The specie increase was $1,106,600; in legal tenders, $161,900. The total increase of liabilities, therefore, was $6,563,100. As compared with that of last week, the statement appears as follows:—

	July 5.	July 12.	Differences.
Loans	$286,905,800	$288,174,500	Inc. $1,268,700
Specie	33,551,400	34,658,000	Inc. 1,106,600
Circulation	27,276,200	27,291,800	Inc. 15,600
Deposits	232,369,400	238,916,900	Inc. 6,547,500
Legal tenders	48,168,000	48,329,900	Inc. 161,900

The following shows the relation between the total reserve and the total liabilities:—

THE FOREIGN MARKET.

The foreign market to-day was reported dull and heavy. Consols for money were quoted at 92⅝ a 92¾; for account 92⅝ a 92¾; five-twenty bonds of 1865 (old) at 98⅝, do. of 1867 at 93½ a 93¾, ten-forties at 90½, new fives at 90½; Erie at 46½ a 46¾. Illinois Central was 86 a 87, and the new French loan at 6⅝ a 6¾ premium.

IMPORTS.

The imports for the week amounted to $9,432,296, of which $7,592,158 represents merchandise, and $1,840,138 represents dry goods.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Perhaps the best key to the present tone of business in stocks is the condition of the money market and the eagerness with which it is sought to place loans at such low rates as 3 and 4 per cent. If there were sufficient capital at work to give legitimate impetus to securities, and to transfer speculation from the broker to the customer, the street would not feel to-day that the pending influences are purely artificial. It is estimated by those who are enough interested to collect statistics and base calculations thereon that, as compared with other seasons, the present shows a deficiency of about ten millions of working capital. A fact so potent as this naturally has the effect of circumscribing the field of money use and forcing banks and brokers alike to make the largest concessions in order to secure business. Hence it is that the quotations to-day on call loans continue to range from 3 to 4 per cent, with exceptional transactions as low as 2 per cent. Foreign exchange maintains the firm figures of yesterday—to wit, 109¾ for 60 days sterling and 110½ for sight. Concessions of ⅛ per cent were made from these prices for actual business.

THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.

The Assistant Treasurer paid out to-day $351,000 on account of interest and $18,000 in redemption of five-twenty bonds.

The custom receipts were $280,182. The balances in the United States Treasury at the close of business to-day were:—Currency, $8,029,036, and the special deposits of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $33,110,000, with coin at $80,828,240, including $44,258,600 in coin certificates. Outstanding legal tenders, $356,000,000. The receipts from internal revenue were $350,921.

The Treasury operations for the week at the New York office included the disbursement of $2,887,806 gold for interest, and $261,100 in redemption of five-twenty bonds, and the receipt of $2,345,410 for customs. The Treasury also sold $1,000,000 gold.

GOLD FIRM.

It is a significant fact that during the past week the shipment of gold has reached the unusually high figure of nearly three millions and a half of dollars. It has been sought to show that this shipment is artificial. The best refutation of the statement is that next week will record a similarly large outflow, much of which has been already engaged. England has confessed herself bare of gold. Germany is coining all she can get and France is comparatively denuded. In other words, our price of exchange makes it profitable to ship and our specie is wanted on the other side. That which stays behind to represent our national faith is "printed paper"—promises to pay, bits of scrip that are good only within our national boundary lines—the artificial exemplars of our national worth, and crusted all over with the signs of national and seemingly irredeemable debt. The Custom House was—perhaps innocently—guilty in its report to-day of the specie export. The total amount should be $1,706,000 for the day. If there should appear any decrease in this amount it is ascribable to the absence from their office of the shipping clerks of the steamer, by which the statement should have been forwarded, they having accompanied an officer of the line down the Bay, without return until too late an hour to make an official report. The fluctuations of the gold market to-day were as follows:—

10 A. M.	116	1:27 P. M.	116
10:10 A. M.	115⅞	2:05 P. M.	115⅞
10:38 A. M.	116	2:54 P. M.	115¾
11:45 A. M.	116⅛	2:55 P. M.	115⅞
11:52 A. M.	116	2:57 P. M.	115¾
11:54 A. M.	115⅞	3 P. M.	115⅞

The carrying rates were 3½, 4, 2½ and 3 per cent. The transactions of the Gold Exchange Bank are shown by the following figures:—

Gold balances	$2,886,794
Currency balances	3,950,575

GOVERNMENT BONDS

may be recorded as strong. The demand, as shown by the recorded sales, may not appear active, but the information is that important private transactions have taken place at market figures which serve to keep the prices firm. There is likewise a larger demand than supply in public. The following are the quotations:—United States currency sixes, 114⅝ a 114⅞; do. do. 1881, registered, 118 a 118½; do. do. do., coupon, 119⅞ a 120⅛; do. five-twenties, registered, May and November, 116¾ a 117¼; do. do. 1862, coupon, do., 117¼ a 117½; do. do. 1864, do. do., 117¾ a 118; do. do. 1865, do. do., 118¾ a 119; do. do. 1867, registered, January and July, 117 a 117¼; do. do. 1865, coupon, do., 117⅞ a 118; do. do. 1867, do. do., 118⅜ a 118⅞; do. do., 1868 do. do., 118¾ a 118⅞; do. ten-forties, registered, 114¾ a 115¼; do. do., coupon, 114¾ a 115¼; do. fives of 1881, coupon, 115⅛ a 115¾.

SOUTHERN SECURITIES.

Beyond the sale of a few South Carolina new sixes at 15, this market was dull, and the quotations stand as already reported, to wit:—Tennessee ex coupon, 80 a 80½; do., new, 79½ a 80; Virginia, ex coupon, 43 a 44; do., sixes, consolidated bonds, 53 a 53½; do., sixes, deferred scrip, 10¼ a 10½; Georgia sixes, 72 a 76; do., sevens, 86 a 88; North Carolina ex coupon, 27 a 27½; do., funding, 1866, 16 a 18; do., do., 1868, 15 a 17; do., new, 15 a 17; do., special tax, 13 a 14; Missouri sixes, 93¼ a 93½; do., Hannibal and St. Joseph, 91 a 92; Louisiana sixes, 45 a 54; do., South Carolina sixes, new, January and July, 15 a 16; do., do., April and October, 20 a 23; Arkansas sixes, funded, 35 a 40; Mobile and Ohio Railroad sterling, 89 a 91; do. interest eights, 84 a 86; Mississippi Central Railroad first mortgage sevens, 84 a 86; do. do. second do. eights, 84 a 86; New Orleans and Jackson Railroad first, 90 a 93; do. do. second, 85 a 87; Memphis and Charleston Railroad first, 84 a 86; do. do. second, 73 a 76; Greenville and Columbia Railroad, guaranteed by South Carolina, 53 a 57; Macon and Brunswick, guaranteed by Georgia, 60 a 63; Memphis city sixes, 53 a 55; Savannah city sevens, 77 a 81; New Orleans sevens, 55 a 60.

THE STOCK MARKET.

It is not pleasant to record an unfruitful fact; nevertheless, it belongs to the history of the Stock Exchange to-day. Speculation was neither active nor remunerative. A brokers' market prevailed. Perhaps it was due to the close of the week. Perhaps the pipes are being laid for a better movement on Monday and Tuesday. Certainly there are predictions, and there is no question that, so far as concerns the objects to which they attach, a movement will then or soon after occur that will put thousands of dollars into somebody's pockets. While there is an absence of outside capital, there is still a sufficient speculative disposition among the members of the Exchange itself to make the market moderately active, and hence prices have been generally well maintained, hope and the possibilities of the future keeping alive the disposition to sell and invest. To-day's transactions show somewhat of a decline in volume, though without much shaking of faith in the price of stocks, on the strength of which the recent rise was forced. There was a good deal of talk about this party being "short" and the other party being "long;" but, from the present outlook, it appears as if we were to have another active week, with encouraging prices and a reasonable Summer demand. The recession in values which was observed to-day may have been incidental to the close of the week. Saturday and Monday, during the Summer time, are notoriously dull commercial days. Western Union opened at 86½ and sold up to 86⅞, closing at its opening price. Pacific Mail was steady at 37½ a 37⅝. New York Central vibrated between 103⅝ a 103⅜. Erie opened at 59⅞, advanced to 60¼ and closed at 59⅞, influences on the other side bearing the stock. Rock Island showed a change of only ⅜ per cent. Lake Shore was steady at 92 a 92¼, as extremes. Hannibal and St. Joseph sold from 40⅞ to 41¼, and closed at 41. Union Pacific fluctuated between 27⅞ a 28. Speculatively Northwestern is gaining ground, opening at 69⅛, closing at 69⅛. The stock is being distributed at reasonable rates, which bid fair to be the basis of future speculative interest. St. Paul was steady at 52⅝ a 52¼. St. Paul preferred sold at 73 a 73½. Ohio and Mississippi showed a change of only about ⅛ per cent. Atlantic and Pacific about the same. Wabash opened at 69⅛, went to 69⅝ and closed at 69⅞. C., C. and I. C. changed ⅛ per cent from opening prices, but receded to the starting point. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western was strong at 99¾, 99⅞ a 100.

BOSTON WOOL MARKET.

BOSTON, July 12, 1873.

The wool market presents no new feature, and prices are unchanged. Manufacturers confine their purchases almost wholly to domestic wool, the new clip of which is passing into the hands of consumers much more rapidly than last year. Ohio and Pennsylvania have been selling at 50c. per pound for good average lots. For Michigan well conditioned 47c. is as high a figure as can rapidly be obtained. Perhaps a slight advance on these prices could be realized for light wool in superior order. California continues to be sold close up. Sales have been made of Ohio and Pennsylvania fleeces, new and old, at 47½c. a 52c.; Michigan and Ohio, to arrive, at 47½c. a 50c.; New Hampshire, Maine, Wisconsin and Michigan, 45c. a 50c.; unwashed fleece, 28c. a 35½c.; tub, 52c. a 54c.; scoured, 43c. a 80c.; medium noils, 42c.; Ohio delaine, 55c.; Western unwashed combing, 40c. a 45c.; domestic and Canada combing, 57½c. a 62½c.; superfine and extra pulled, 25c. a 55c.; Spring California, 24c. a 35c. per lb.

HAVANA MARKETS.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

The Civil Justices' Salaries.

The Comptroller states that the publication of the statement in yesterday's HERALD that he had ordered warrants drawn for the balance of salaries of civil justices is slightly inaccurate. While he has paid judgments in favor of certain justices, he has not had time to look over the points in the claims of others; but he states that if he finds that all the points raised by any claimant have been passed upon by the Court he will pay the claim. He intimates that he may have an offset against the claims of some, but does not state the nature of the offset. It is probable that the Comptroller proposes to present a contra account against some of the justices who are in the habit of going to Saratoga, Long Branch or Europe, for the number of days absent. The HERALD reporter may here state that his information that the Comptroller had decided to draw warrants for the salaries of all was derived from one of his subordinates, who certainly ought to know of the Comptroller's intentions.

The Mayor's Office.

Affairs about the City Hall were yesterday at a virtual standstill. There were few politicians about. The fight between the combination and the Mayor's minority seems to create no longer any excitement, as it is generally believed that the combination cannot be broken. Alderman Kehr has been looking for Commissioner of Emigration George Starr, with the pickled cowhide that Alderman Cooper so gracefully declined to receive. The only question that attracts interest is the probable action of the Mayor as to the assessed valuation of the Nineteenth, Twelfth and Twenty-second wards, for the examination of which a special committee of the Supervisors, consisting of Messrs. Koch, Cooper and McCafferty, was appointed. The Mayor was seen by a representative of the HERALD yesterday, and, while the conversation was not in the form of an interview, it is safe to say that he believes every Supervisor has the right to examine the rolls; but nobody, Supervisor or Tax Commissioner, to make changes. Mr. McCafferty's action has attracted much attention in the wards affected, and it is said the committee will organize early in the ensuing week, and, making him chairman, proceed to examine and report upon the matter. The report will be looked for with interest, but it is not likely to be completed within two weeks.

BURGLARS TAKEN IN THE ACT.

Late on Thursday night two burglars, who had been followed around Harlem for a number of hours by Officer Clark, of the Twelfth precinct, broke the glass in the window of the clothing store 2,314 Third avenue, owned by John D. Theirs. The breaking of the glass awakened a nephew of the proprietor, who was sleeping on the premises, and the burglars fled—into the arms of Officer Clark. They described themselves as George Thomas and William Gason. The latter is known to the police as a professional cracksman. Both were yesterday taken to Police Headquarters and their photographs added to the Rogues' Gallery. They were afterwards arraigned before Judge McQuade, at the Harlem Police Court, and fully committed for trial without bail.

Before the prisoners were removed to the Tombs Gason was identified by Mrs. Emma G. Aiken, of 237 East 123d street, as one of the burglars who, on June 19, perpetrated a brilliant and bold burglary at her residence. On the day named Mrs. Aiken locked up her house in the morning and went away. On returning in the afternoon she found that an entrance had been forced into the basement, and, on entering, she was met in the hall by Gason, who told her not to be afraid; that he was an officer, and that there was a burglar in the cellar whom he was endeavoring to capture. A moment afterwards a man dashed out of the house, pursued by Gason, who, of course, failed to return. Mrs. Aiken then discovered that all her jewelry and money, together with other valuables, had been stolen.

Gason denied this latter burglary, but confessed he was a thief.

Tumultuous Scene in the Parliament—Gambetta's Assault on the Government—Cabinet Challenge to the Radical Orator.

TELEGRAM TO THE NEW YORK HERALD.

VERSAILLES, July 12, 1873.

There was a tumultuous scene in the National Assembly to-day, and the disorder finally became so great that M. Buffet, the President of the body, was obliged to suspend the sitting.

Upon the resumption of the session M. Gambetta ascended the tribune and proceeded to address the Assembly in defence of his speech delivered at Grenoble. He said France was revolutionary. He glorified universal suffrage and accused the majority of the Assembly of wishing to mutilate it.

M. Ernoul, Minister of Justice, protested against the charges of M. Gambetta. "The government," he said, "was willing to accept a debate upon its policy at any time."

Military Punishment of the Assassins in Alcoy.

TELEGRAM TO THE NEW YORK HERALD.

MADRID, July 12, 1873.

In the Cortes this afternoon the Minister of War spoke of the atrocities committed in Alcoy by the Internationalist insurrectionists, and said the government was determined to punish the persons guilty of the assassinations in that town.

A despatch has been received at the War Office from General Velarde announcing his arrival before Alcoy and his determination to attack the town to-day.

ELOPEMENT AND TRAGEDY.

Sad Finale to Love's Young Dream—Mysterious Death of a Devoted Couple at Harmony, Pa.—Both Found Weltering in Blood—Is It Suicide or Murder?

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 12, 1873.

A terrible tragedy was enacted yesterday afternoon in the quiet, old-fashioned Dutch village of Harmony, some twenty-five miles distant from this city, accessible only by stage, and lacking telegraph connection with the outer world. The victims of this murder and suicide were Miss Kate Faulstech, a beautiful girl, aged seventeen, and John Frazier, a sober, industrious young fellow of about twenty-five years of age.

Little less than a year ago the parties resided with their respective parents, in adjoining houses, in the centre of Wheeling, W. V. Frazier was sober and was well thought of in the neighborhood, while Kate Faulstech was also of an excellent family and the pet of that household. An acquaintance between the two was struck up, which ripened into mutual affection for each other. The parents of Kate watched the progress of affairs and at a proper time slipped in and forbade Frazier to visit the house any more. The lovers, however, arranged secret meetings, and, at length becoming convinced that the consent of Kate's parents could never be had to their union, the young pair resolved on eloping.

One dark night the girl left her happy home and started for this city with her lover. The mother of the girl, on discovering the absence of her daughter, was convinced in her own mind that she had run away. The telegraph was put in operation, and, according to instructions, the train was stopped and the two elopers captured near Stuebenville. They were brought back and the parents of the girl brought an action against Frazier on the charge of enticing their daughter from her home. They failed to make out a case owing to the fact that the girl would testify nothing damaging to her lover. Shortly afterward Frazier started to New York and from there came to this city, where he remained for some time, keeping up a secret correspondence with the object of his soul's affection. In answer to his request they arranged for another elopement. All necessary preparations were made and arrangements for departure secretly to Wooster, Ohio, were carefully planned at this point.

Frazier met her according to agreement, and from there came to this city, where they lived as man and wife for some weeks. It is not known whether they were married or not; but it is presumed they were, as Frazier wrote to that effect to some friends in Wheeling from this city a few days ago. Yesterday John and Kate arrived there, and put up a Drovers' Home, kept by James Chauncy. Both were well dressed and shown to a room, where they spent the most of the day, and nothing particular was noticed either about their movements or conduct. In the evening the gentleman asked the proprietor where a buggy could be hired. He thought he should like to take a drive, as the country seemed very beautiful. Accordingly a messenger was sent to hire a vehicle, and in due time it was driven to the door of the hotel. Word was sent to the strangers who, of course, were supposed to be man and wife, that the buggy was ready and waiting at the door. The couple, however, did not promptly come down stairs, and the proprietor waited patiently for his guests, thinking, perhaps, that the gentleman might need some instructions as to which road was best to drive along.

While thus waiting he was startled by hearing the report of a pistol from the room. Chauncey instantly ran up stairs, and was horrified to see a pistol shot wound in the young girl's forehead, from which the warm blood was slowly trickling down her ashy pale face.

Kate staggered like a drunken woman and fell helplessly into the terrified landlord's arms. He slowly descended the stairs with his burden, when he was again startled by a second report of a pistol. Half crazed with fright, he dropped the dying girl, and, rushing up stairs, found Frazier lying on the floor, writhing in the agonies of death, his face covered with blood and a bullet hole in his forehead. He was lifted into bed, but made no reply to the questions put to him. Medical assistance was summoned, and the doctors at once commenced to probe for the ball. As the man's injuries were of a most serious nature this work was soon given up. The unfortunate lover lingered till this afternoon and died. The wounded girl refuses to answer any questions in regard to the shooting, and being in such a condition no one has the heart to insist of her giving replies to questions concerning the sad affair. The latest intelligence from Harmony to-night state that she is now unconscious, and death may be looked for at any moment. The supposition is that the couple could not withstand the painful opposition and persecutions of the enraged parents and preferred death rather than submit to another separation. The affair, as may be imagined, created the greatest excitement in the humble village of Harmony.

SHOOTING HIS SWEETHEART.

LINDSAY, Canada West, July 12, 1873.

This morning about eight o'clock a man named David Nesbitt murdered May A. Hopwood. He was afterwards arrested. It appeared at the inquest that the prisoner had been keeping company with the deceased, and her friends warning her not to keep company with Nesbitt, he persisted that he was married to deceased, and that if he did not get her his life would be lost. On meeting her this morning on the way to the station he wished to accompany her, and on being refused he returned to the house of her brother, and after some angry words shot her twice near the heart.

A LIVELY TIME IN A CALIFORNIA BANK.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11, 1873.

At Marysville to-day a bold attempt was made by three men to rob the bank of Decker & Jewett. Frank Whipple, one of the robbers, entered the bank and presented a pistol at Mr. Jewett's head. Jewett fell down and made his way to the desk where Mr. Bingham, the chief clerk was writing. Whipple leaped over the counter, followed by Bingham, who instantly shot Whipple in the neck. A desperate and general fight then ensued. Several shots were fired, when the combatants clubbed their pistols. Finally Whipple turned to run out of the bank, when Bingham and Jewett simultaneously fired upon him with double barrelled shot guns, and he fell mortally wounded on the sidewalk. Whipple says he had two confederates, named John Toney and W. P. Winkiesy. They escaped, and officers and citizens are pursuing them. Whipple is shot through the body in many places.

TWENTY-THIRD WARD POLITICS.

Richardson, committee appointed by the Republican General Committee of Kings county as enrolling officers for the Twenty-third (new) ward, met and organized on Friday evening and elected Mr. Richardson as Chairman. They will meet on July 15, 16 and 22, at 425 Gates avenue, and act as an Enrolling Board from eight to nine P. M. Those desiring to enrol must appear in person.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 12, 1873.

Interesting Questions Answered by the Assistant Attorney General of the Post Office Department.

Questions having been referred to the Assistant Attorney General of the Post Office Department, first, in case a greater or less amount of service is advertised for upon a route than is in operation at the time of advertising, should the checks accompanying bids be five per cent of the cost of the existing service, or of a pro rata amount as compared with the service called for by advertisement? Second, does the phrase new service in the 253d section of the new postal code mean, as heretofore used by the department, "service over a route on which none exists at the time of bidding, and that only, or does it also include service differing in the frequency or extent of the trips then existing?"

Upon the first question the Assistant Attorney General says that in case a greater or less amount of service is advertised upon a route than is performed upon the same route at the time of advertising, the checks accompanying the bids should not be less than five per centum of the amount of one year's pay proposed in such bid, if the bid exceeds five thousand dollars.

Regarding the second question, it is answered that the term "new service," in the 253d section of the Postal Code, not only means service advertised to be performed on a route on which none is performed at time of advertising, but includes also service to be performed over a route differing in character as to the mode, manner or frequency of trips from that performed on the same route at the time of advertising.

The Department of Dakota.

Several inquiries have been received at the War Department as to whether the headquarters of the Department of Dakota are to be removed from St. Paul, Minn., to Minneapolis, it having been announced there that the headquarters were to be so removed. The Secretary authorizes its contradiction, as the President has the authority of making the change, and he has no idea now of doing so.

Wyoming Indians Becoming Very Naughty.

A letter to the Indian Bureau from the Cheyenne and Arrapahoe Agency, Wyoming, reports manifestations of uneasiness on the part of the Arrapahoes, a number of whom recently started on the warpath, but of whom all but fourteen young men were overtaken by peaceable Indians of the tribe and made to return to the reservation. The young men, however, persisted in going on, and attacked a band of Toucas who were on leave from their reservation for the purpose of making peace with the Osages. They killed the second chief of the Toucas, scalped him, brought the scalp into camp and purposed having a scalp dance over it.

The Chicago Relief Act.

Doubts having arisen in the minds of some of the Treasury officials as to whether the privileges conferred by the Chicago Relief act expired with April 4 or April 5, 1873, it being limited to one year from and after its passage, April 5, 1872, the Secretary of the Treasury to-day decided to adhere to the construction heretofore given to it, which included the 5th of April, 1873, in its operation, thus giving it the most liberal construction.

The Secretary of the Treasury to-day received $80 in a note from Newark, N. J., signed "Quartermaster."

A Boating Disaster.

This morning Frank Posey, who lives on the north side of Piscataway Creek, in Prince George county, Md., started across the creek with his wife and brother in a small boat to put Mrs. Posey aboard the steamboat that she might go to For Foote. The waves from the steamer's wheel swamped the little boat and all were precipitated into the water, and before assistance was available Mrs. Posey and the boy were drowned.

THE INMAN WRECK.

Arrival of the Passengers of the City of Washington at Portland, Me.—Unfavorable Weather at Port Le Bear—The Cargo Drifting Out to Sea.

PORTLAND, Me., July 12, 1873.

The steamer Falmouth, from Halifax, with the passengers from the wrecked steamer City of Washington, is signalled.

Further Particulars from the Scene of the Wreck.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 12, 1873.

A despatch from Port Le Bear states that the weather continues unfavorable for the operations of the divers at the steamer City of Washington. The steamer M. A. Starr arrived there at ten o'clock this morning and sailed again for Halifax at two o'clock, with the remaining steerage passengers and the captain, officers and crew. The steamer is expected here about twelve o'clock to-night. The steerage passengers will be transferred to the steamer Somerset for Boston. It is said that fully six hundred packages of goods have drifted to sea from the wreck.

THE COURTS.

Process has been issued out of the United States District Court, at the suit of the United States vs. William Duden, Frederick W. Muser and Richard Muser, to recover $102,000 debt for penalties, &c., for alleged violation of the customs revenue laws. The date of the præcipe is July 12, 1873, and it is returnable August 5, 1873.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

The Case of Catherine McCarthy—Suit to Recover Custody of a Child.

Before Judge Ingraham.

Some time ago a writ of habeas corpus was issued by Judge Ingraham to compel the Commissioners of Charities and Correction to produce before the Court the body of Kate Smith, alias McCarthy, a child of about six or seven years. The little girl, it appeared, had been given into the custody of a Mr. and Mrs. Smith, but had been reclaimed by the Commissioners, whereupon the Smiths sought to regain possession of the girl. To the writ the Commissioners made return that, though they had given the girl to the custody of the Smiths, they had subsequently discovered that the Smiths had been engaged, as was alleged, in keeping a house of prostitution; that, deeming such parties unfit to have the care of the child, they took her away, claiming the right so to do.

To this the Smiths replied that they were without children of their own, and had taken this child to bring up; that they were worth considerable property, in which they intended the child should share, they having already placed $1,500 to her credit in the bank; that, though they had kept a house of ill-repute, they had given it up for the child's sake and had gone to live elsewhere. Decision in the case, which has now been rendered, was delayed for the purpose of taking testimony as to the circumstances of the claimant.

Judge Ingraham now directs that the child remain with the Commissioners. He finds from the testimony taken that the parties occupied a room adjoining the house of prostitution; that though the child nominally lived in such room she had been accustomed to go into the house adjoining through a connecting door when she wanted food and money, and that though claimants had given up their disreputable business yet they had done so recently and under circumstances leaving it uncertain whether they had done so from motives of reformation.

An Over-persistent Lover—He Attempts to Stab the Object of His Affections and Instead Stabs Her Friend.

Before Judge Dowling.

About four years ago Mary McCabe, a bright, fresh looking girl, arrived at Castle Garden. She was then about sixteen years of age and just blooming into womanhood. Not finding any occupation suitable in New York she made her way to Boston. There she remained for a long time, in different situations, always maintaining her good character as well as her natural good health and beauty. While in Boston she became acquainted with a young man named John Holland. John was a native of Boston and about twenty-two years of age. He became desperately in love with Mary, and after a very short time proposed marriage. She refused him. John still persisted in his attentions and followed her from place to place. Although the girl was adverse to any matrimonial connection she was somewhat flattered by his persistency, and always treated him more or less kindly. A few weeks since Miss McCabe came to New York and went to the house of a friend of hers, Mrs. Catharine Kelly, 73 Washington street. John Holland followed her to this city a few days afterward. He obtained employment as truckman and took lodgings at 14 Washington street. On Friday evening he saw his long lost Mary entering her house. He followed her to her apartments on the third floor. He entered the room in which she and her friend, Mrs. Kelly, a lady, about sixty years of age, with whom she boarded, was sitting. Thereupon ensued a scene. John Holland, in a boisterous and excited way, walked up and down the back room on the third floor of 73 Washington street, told his tale of love, and for the nineteenth and last time offered his hand and fortune to Miss Mary McCabe. Mary, the cold-hearted, responded only by a ringing peal of laughter, and then suddenly softening down said, "John, you are a dissipated young man, and my friends are against it. So go out quickly and leave me alone. Decency forbids me to say any more before strangers." Hardly had the girl got through speaking when Holland pulled out a knife and made a violent thrust at her. Mrs. Kelly ran between them and caught the blow on her left arm, and suffered a severe wound thereby, the blood flowing profusely for a long time. An outcry was at once raised throughout the house, and Holland was arrested and locked up in the Twenty-seventh precinct. He was brought before Judge Dowling yesterday and held in $1,000 to answer.

Discharge of the Supposed Brandy Thieves.

Lawrence Emerson, Charles Richards, Louisa Pearl and Henrietta Harris, who were arrested by Officer Quigley, of the Fourteenth precinct, charged with being concerned in the robbery of six cases of brandy, were brought up for examination yesterday before Judge Dowling. Emerson and Richards were charged with stealing the brandy and Louisa Pearl and Henrietta as being receivers. The officer saw the goods taken from the sidewalk, and brought to Harris' house, where they were seized. They were unable, up to three o'clock, to find any claimant for the property. Counsellor Abe Hummell, who appeared for the prisoners, told the Court that the brandy in question was a spurious article, worth about $5 a dozen, and it was the custom of the people selling it to assert in a confidential manner that it was stolen, to more readily effect its sale. Two experts, importers, were examined, who testified that they would not give twenty-five cents a bottle for it. The prisoners were discharged.

THE BALLOON TRIP ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 12, 1873.

A meeting of citizens interested in the projected Philadelphia balloon enterprise to Europe was held to-night at the Continental Hotel. General A. M. Stout presided. Charles Wise, son of Professor Wise, gave his experience and assurance of his willingness to join Colonel De Alma in a trip across the ocean. Colonel De Alma followed in explanation of the project in detail, which, he said, was practicable. After which resolutions were adopted increasing the number of the committee on the subject, and inviting co-operation of the Franklin Institute and Academy of Natural Sciences.

FIRE IN PITTSBURG.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 12, 1873.

Lewis & Rossotter's foundry, the oldest in Pittsburg, was burned this afternoon, about four o'clock. The loss is estimated at from $25,000 to $30,000, on which there is an insurance of $10,000. The fire caught in the pattern room, and before it was checked had communicated to a number of tenement houses on the opposite side of Second avenue, destroying them as well as five horses. The Pittsburg gas works were at one time in great danger, but they were saved. The total loss is $50,000.

Marine Disasters.

BARK COMMERCE, Foster, at Boston 11th from Terranova, lost maintopmast and head of mizenmast on the 9th of May, in the Mediterranean.

BRIG ALMA (Ger), from Wilmington, NC, for Rotterdam (before reported), in going down the Cape Fear River 8th inst, struck midway against some logs at Wreck Shoals, nine miles below Wilmington, and was held fast. As the tide was falling at the time she had to remain in this position until the full tide, leaking at the rate of 12 inches per hour. On the morning of the 10th she was got off and towed to the city and the agent of the underwriters notified of the fact. He immediately summoned a board of inspectors and proceeded to an investigation of damages. Owing to the vessel being stowed with cargo, no satisfactory examination resulted, but she was ordered to discharge and go on the ways for repairs at once.

SCHR SOVEREIGN, Ross, from San Francisco June 16, went ashore in a calm two miles southwest of Russian Bay July 1, and will prove a total loss.

SCHR KATE E RICH, from a coal port, in going up Boston harbor July 1, got ashore on Lovell's Island, but would probably come off at high water.

SCHR ADELE, of Falmouth, went upon the ways at New Bedford on the 2d of July for repairs. On the 8th she was launched, and on hoisting the mainsail the head of the mainmast snapped off. An examination showed that there was no decay or defect in the wood, and the captain adopts the theory that the mast was struck by lightning on the night of the 3d.

SCHR PLANET (of Rockland), while at anchor in Buttermilk Channel, on Friday afternoon, was struck by lightning, and had her topmast shattered and received other damage. Some of the crew were stunned, but none seriously injured.

COLLISION—On the night of the 8th inst, about 10 o'clock, a severe gust of wind came up in the harbor of Pensacola, which raged with violence for some time from the southwest. The steamer Lizzie, Capt Felsher, from New Orleans, moored in the harbor, broke from her fastenings and fouled with a British ship lying in port loading with lumber for Europe. The Lizzie's foremast struck the bowsprit of the ship, carrying it away; also the main mast and flagstaff, with other trifling damage. Capt Felsher could not ascertain the name of the ship the steamer fouled with.

NORFOLK, Va, July 12—One W H Winn, purporting to be mate of the vessel, arrived yesterday, bringing a report that the schr R E Thompson, from Baltimore for Wilmington, had been run into and sunk off Hatteras, and that the captain, his wife and four children, and all hands, excepting the aforesaid Winn, were drowned. The report is not credited, and Winn is believed to be an imposter.

NEW BEDFORD, July 11—Yacht Washington, previously reported as having struck a rock at Naushon, has again returned to this port in a leaky condition. The yacht belongs at New York, and was chartered by a party for an excursion, but she does not come up to their ideas of what a yacht should be.

Notice to Mariners.

TEXAS—LIGHTHOUSE AT THE ENTRANCE TO MATAGORDA BAY.

Notice is hereby given that the light in the old tower at the entrance to Matagorda Bay, known as the "Matagorda Lighthouse," will be extinguished on the 1st of September, prox, and that a third order white light, flashing every 90 seconds, will be exhibited on and after that date from the new tower, recently erected, about 1¾ miles distant, and bearing S 59 deg 43 min W (SW by W¾W) from the old fifth order lighthouse.

The latitude of the new tower is 28 deg 20 min 17.4 sec North, and longitude 96 deg 25 min 04.8 sec West.

The focal plane is 83 feet 8 inches above the base of the tower and 91 feet 2 inches above the mean level of the sea, and the light should be visible in clear weather from the deck of a vessel 15 feet above the water, at a distance of 15 nautical miles.

The arc illuminated will be the entire horizon, and the light will be visible in the bays of Matagorda and Corpus Christi. The tower is of cast iron, in the form of a truncated cone, and is painted black. Its back ground, seen from all points of the compass, is the sky. The keeper's dwelling, a one and a half story frame house, painted white, stands a few yards NE of the tower.

Vessels should not attempt to cross the bar at the entrance to Matagorda Bay without a pilot, as it is constantly changing, with a depth of water varying from 7 to 9 feet. Anchorage may be made in from 7 to 8 fathoms, with the light bearing NW. Good pilots are to be found at all times.

In running down the coast, Half Moon Reef light, in Matagorda Bay, may be made before Matagorda light, and, in passing sand hills, may appear as a flashing light; going up the rigging a few feet will dispel the illusion.

Variation of the needle, 8 deg 37 min E.

By order of the Lighthouse Board.

JOSEPH HENRY, Chairman.

THE UNIVERSITY MEDICINES.
CATARRH SPECIFIC.
Catarrh is an obstinate and difficult disease to cure. It baffles the efforts of our best physicians, who resign its treatment in despair. The ordinary washes, snuffs and inhalations are useless. In every form of catarrh the CATARRH SPECIFIC is infallible. Thousands whom it has thoroughly cured say one bottle of it surpasses all other vaunted remedies in the market. It cures every condition of catarrh, ozaena, caryza, influenza, gravedo, pharyngitis, laryncitis, trachitis, &c. Price $2 per bottle, or three bottles for $5. For full particulars of these celebrated remedies and list of agencies see the favorite University Almanac. Principal office No. 8 University place. Downtown agency, HUDNUT, Herald Building.
